b. In Case of Express Statutory Regulation. Some local statutes expressly provide that the domestic liens arising thereunder shall be inferior to mortgage liens. The question whether the admiralty court will regard this attempt to regulate the priority of maritime liens on domestic vessels is an interesting one, and cannot be considered as definitely settled. The state can undoubtedly regulate the priorities of non-maritime liens on domestic vessels, in proceedings in its own jurisdiction.²⁹ And it has already been seen that parties claiming a lien under a local statute must show a compliance with its conditions.³⁰ Under the influence of this principle some cases hold that the party claiming under a local statute is bound by its provisions as to priorities, and must take subject to any liens, common-law or otherwise, that the statute may prefer to his.³¹ But the better opinion is that, as these domestic liens are enforced, not because the statute gives them, but because when once given they are maritime regardless of their origin, they are inherently and necessarily superior to common-law liens; and hence that a state statute cannot affect their innate priority, however wide its power may be to prescribe conditions as to registry and limitation.³²

B. As Among Maritime Liens — 1. AS BETWEEN CONTRACT AND TORT CLAIMS. The general principle is that a tort claim ranks a prior contract claim. This is because in the first place a maritime claimant, having a jus in re, carries the risk of the vessel's committing torts, just as he carries the risk of perils of the sea; and because in the second place a tort relation is an involuntary relation, and by the Limited Liability Act a tort claimant is limited to the value of the vessel at vanced to release it from a common-law attachment.

32. This line of thought is elaborated by Mr. Justice Gray in The J. E. Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 13 S. Ct. 498, 37 L. ed. 345, although he disclaims any intention to finally pass the time of the tort, whereas a contract claimant ordinarily has a personal remedy against the owner.³³ The English decisions accord with this view and in fact are the basis of the American decisions on the subject.³⁴ This principle applies not only to pure tort claims but also to tort claims where there is also a contract relation, as for example damages from negligent towing.³⁵ But a subsequent contract claim ranks a tort claim; for, under the Limited Liability Act, the tort claimant can only hold the vessel as she was at the time of the tort, and subsequent increments to her value or benefits conferred upon her are in the interests of prior lien claimants of any character.³⁶

2. AS AMONG CONTRACT CLAIMS — a. As Affected by Relative Inherent Merit — (1) IN GENERAL. Certain maritime liens have a preference by nature, and this causes a classification of them which adheres to them in the absence of special circumstances.³⁷ The order of preference may be stated as follows: (1) Seamen's wages;³⁸ (2) salvage;³⁹ (3) materialmen's claims, towage, pilotage, and general average;⁴⁰ and (4) bottomry.⁴¹ This order is followed, regardless of dates, as upon the question. And it is forcibly presented by Mr. Justice Matthews in his opinion on circuit in The Guiding Star, 18 Fed. 263. See also The Alice Getty, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 193, 2 Flipp. 18; and infra, X, B, 2, c, (1).

33. This question is elaborately discussed in The John G. Stevens, 170 U. S. 113, 18 S. Ct. 544, 42 L. ed. 969 [disapproving The Amos D. Carver, 35 Fed. 665; The Grapeshot, 22 Fed. 123; The America, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 288], which was a question between a claim for negligent towage and a previous contract claim. The decisions of the inferior New York courts had been to the contrary, some placing the claims on the same footing, others preferring the contract claims. The following cases also hold the tort claim inferior, all these having been decided before the John G. Stevens case: The John G. Stevens, 58 Fed. 792; The Gratitude, 42 Fed. 299; The Augustine Kobbe, 39 Fed. 559; The Young America, 30 Fed. 789; The Samuel J. Christian, 16 Fed. 796; Provost v. The Selkirk, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,455. See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Maritime Liens," § 69.

On the other hand the following hold the tort claim superior: The Escanaba, 96 Fed. 252; The Daisy Day, 40 Fed. 538; The John G. Stevens, 40 Fed. 331; The R. S. Carter, 38 Fed. 515; The Director, 34 Fed. 57, 13 Sawy. 172; The M. Vandercook, 24 Fed. 472; The Pride of the Ocean, 3 Fed. 162; Hatton v. The Melita, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,218, 3 Hughes 494.

Tort claims and seamen's wages.—Although The John G. Stevens case (170 U. S. 113, 18 S. Ct. 544, 42 L. ed. 969) disclaims any purpose of passing upon the relative rank of tort claims and prior seamen's wages, its reasoning is equally applicable to this case, and the better authority so holds. The Nettie Woodward, 50 Fed. 224; *The F. among claims of different classes, subject to exceptions arising from special circumstances.⁴²

(II) SEAMEN'S WAGES. These have always been treated with special favor in the admiralty courts, and are held to rank previous or contemporaneous contract claims.⁴³ They rank subsequent supply claims that do not add to the permanent value of the vessel.⁴⁴ But where a boat had been wrecked, repairs necessary to enable her to reach port were preferred to prior wages and placed on an equality with wages accruing soon thereafter.⁴⁵ But a claim for wages cannot be set up against a claim for which the mariner is personally responsible.⁴⁶

(III) SALVAGE. This is of a high order of merit and ranks all claims existing at the date of the service; for it preserves the rest for their benefit.⁴⁷

(IV) MATERIALMEN'S CLAIMS, TOWAGE, PILOTAGE, AND GENERAL AVERAGE. These rank equally in the absence of special equities. The claims of materialmen in this connection include everything covered by the expression "necessaries" as heretofore defined.⁴⁸ Accordingly materials and supplies and towage practically contemporaneous rank together.⁴⁹ Materialmen's claims also rank claims for wharfage and demurrage.⁵⁰ Such claims also rank claims for insurance premiums, as the latter have no lien at all.⁵¹ As among each other there is no difference in dignity between supplies and repairs.⁵² Subsequent

It certainly ranks prior claims of materialmen (Collins v. The Fort Wayne, 6 Fed. Cas.

No. 288 (an interesting discussion of relative priorities by Judge Hall) supply claims are preferred to liens arising out of contracts of affreightment. The case was decided in 1853, and cannot be sustained under the later authorities as against affreightment claims partaking also of the nature of torts. See supra, X, B, 1.

general average may rank claims for necessities; indeed, it seems that considerations similar to those governing salvage claims apply to claims of this kind, although operating in a less degree.⁵³

(v) BOTTOMRY. A bottomry lien is not favored as against subsequent liens, or even as against liens arising on the same voyage. The reason is that the bottomry claimant can charge a higher rate of interest for his risk and ought therefore to carry it as against perils of the sea or claims enabling the ship to avoid them. Hence a materialman who has contributed to the preservation of the res ranks a bottomry.⁵⁴ So a lien for advances,⁵⁵ or a claim for general average arising during the same voyage, ranks a prior bottomry.⁵⁶

b. As Affected by Dates—(i) AS AMONG DIFFERENT VOYAGES. It has long been a favorite doctrine of admiralty law that liens for necessities furnished on the last voyage rank similar liens for prior voyages. This is because they are for the benefit of prior liens, as more proximately contributing to the preservation of the res. In case of long voyages this is still the law, in the absence of special circumstances.⁵⁷

(ii) AS MODIFIED BY RELATIVE STALENESS. Under the influence of the preceding doctrine, the general principle is that claims of the same nature separated by an appreciable interval are paid in the inverse order of their dates; the later liens really benefiting the older, and the older by delay holding the vessel out to later lienors as worthy of credit.⁵⁸ This is not affected by filing a libel and holding up process, or serving process and permitting the vessel to run, for the creditor by doing this holds her out as worthy of credit to those who subsequently deal with her.⁵⁹ But the shortness and frequency of modern voyages and the necessity of a reasonable credit in modern business have brought about a modification of this rule, as applied to claims of comparatively recent date. On the Great Lakes and canals the priorities are determined by the seasons of navigation, the last season ranking. This is about equivalent to classifying them by the year.⁶⁰ In New York harbor work claims less than forty days old rank older ones.⁶¹ But ordinarily similar claims varying but slightly in date or overlapping each other or furnished during the same season are placed on the same footing.⁶²

c. As Affected by Origin—(i) AS BETWEEN FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC MARITIME LIENS. There is quite a number of decisions holding that liens arising Arctic, 22 Fed. 126; The Grapeshot, 22 Fed. 123. In The Favorite, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,699, 3 Sawy. 405, a supply claim was preferred to a materialman because the latter arose under a local statute. Later cases have abolished this distinction. See infra, X, B, 2, c.

53. This seems to be the reason for preferring general average to necessities in Provost v. The Selkirk, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,455. The commissioner treated the jettison giving rise to the average claim as practically a salvage service for the benefit of prior lienors.

under the general maritime law are prior in dignity to liens arising under the state law, even where the latter become maritime and are enforceable by admiralty process.⁶³ But the better authority and the preponderance of authority are that, as both are maritime, their nature is the same regardless of their origin, and hence that they are equal in dignity.⁶⁴ The state cannot alter the principles of the maritime law as to the relative rank of liens;⁶⁵ but liens created by a state statute which are not maritime by nature nor enforceable by admiralty process are inferior to foreign or domestic maritime liens.⁶⁶

(ii) AS AMONG STATE LIENS. As among liens arising under state statutes there is no difference of rank when enforced in an admiralty court as admiralty liens;⁶⁷ but when the claimant resorts to the state court to enforce his lien not as a maritime lien (in which case the state court cannot enforce it as such), but as a lien arising under the local statute, he is governed by the provisions of that statute as to priorities or enforcement.⁶⁸ Yet while a state may regulate the method of distribution in its own courts, it must be borne in mind that state courts cannot sell a vessel clear of maritime liens; and hence that a maritime claimant who does not intervene in the state court is not affected by it.⁶⁹

d. As Affected by Suit or Decree — (i) INSTITUTION OF SUIT. It was for a long time the preponderance of authority that as among claims otherwise equal in dignity the one first securing a judicial seizure of the vessel was entitled to priority. This was based not only on the ground of preferring the diligent, of whose efforts others reaped the benefit, but on the idea then prevailing that the maritime lien was not so much an interest in the thing as a mere right of arrest of the thing.⁷⁰ But the result of the later investigation holding a maritime lien to be not a mere remedy but an interest in the thing itself has been to overturn this line of decisions. It is now practically settled that a mere arrest of the vessel gives the party securing it no rights which he did not have before.⁷¹

(n) REDUCTION OF CLAIM TO DECREE—(A) In America. The practice in the different districts varies greatly as to the effect of a decree establishing a claimant's rights, although the reported cases on the subject are not numerous. The preponderance of American decisions as reported is that the rank of a maritime lien is not affected by merely obtaining a decree proving a claim, as against other claimants intervening at any time before final decree. Such a decree still leaves open all questions of priority.⁷² But if the decree is a final adjudication of the creditor's rights, leaving open only the steps necessary to realize on it, the better opinion is that the creditor should be preferred to any later claimant, subject only to the power of the court for special causes shown to reopen the decree.⁷³ The necessity of this as a guide to bidders at a sale of a vessel and in order to promote the realization of the best price is apparent.⁷⁴

(B) In England. In England a maritime claimant who reduces his claim to decree is considered to have the highest security known to the law, and to have obtained a preference thereby.⁷⁵

3. AS AMONG TORT CLAIMS—a. As Affected by Dates. There is a difference of opinion as to whether the older or later tort claim would rank, irrespective of so long an interval of time as would constitute laches. On the one hand it is contended that the prior tort claimant, having a jus in re and being in one sense an owner of an interest in the vessel, takes the risk of allowing her to navigate and incur liabilities for torts, just as he takes the risk of the perils of the sea, and hence that the last tort claim ranks.⁷⁶ On the other hand it is urged that the preference of the last maritime lien in contract cases is based on the theory of a later and more immediate benefit to the vessel, that this cannot apply to tort claims, and hence that the first tort claimant should be preferred.⁷⁷ In view of the nature of the maritime lien as a jus in re so firmly established by the more recent decisions, the view that the last tort lien is to be preferred seems best sustained by principle.⁷⁸

b. As Affected by Suit or Decree. The discussion of the effect on contract liens of suit or decree applies equally to tort claims.⁷⁹

XI. LAW GOVERNING.

Nature of the maritime lien as a jus in re has already been discussed supra, II, A. See especially the interesting discussion of its nature in The Young Mechanic, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 18,180, 2 Curt. 404.

But in the state court, in a proceeding to enforce a state lien, an attachment will override an existing lien if the state statute properly construed gives the attachment priority, or makes seizure a necessary condition to the existence of a lien. *Donald v. 74. See a brief discussion of this in Hughes Admiralty 351. The court will certainly not listen to an application to intervene after sale and distribution of the proceeds, so far as to affect the rights of maritime claimants already adjudicated, or the title of the purchaser. The James G. Swan, 106 Fed. 94; The Dode, 100 Fed. 478; The Kaloolah, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,602, Brown Adm. 55; Schuchardt v. The Angelique, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,483d.

trols if the vessel is a domestic vessel at the port where they are furnished; and that the general maritime law as adopted into our jurisdiction governs if the vessel at the place of furnishing is a vessel of another state.⁸⁰ In other words the law of the place where the supplies are furnished governs; but the law of the place in case of domestic vessels is the local statute law, and the law of the place in case of foreign vessels is the general maritime law.⁸¹

B. As Between Vessels of the United States and Foreign Countries.

Here too the law of the place where the supplies are furnished (that is, in case of foreign vessels, the general maritime law as adopted in the United States) governs, although the law of the vessel's flag may be different.⁸²

XII. ENFORCEMENT OF LIEN; REMEDIES OF MARITIME CLAIMANT.⁸³

A. In General. The discussion of the remedies of a maritime claimant as to the great mass of maritime liens, as for collision,⁸⁴ salvage,⁸⁵ personal injuries,⁸⁶ etc., belongs to those separate subjects, and is beyond the purview of this treatise.

B. As to Materialmen — 1. IN GENERAL. It is an axiom of marine law as administered in this country that materialmen have a three-fold remedy: (1) Against the vessel; (2) against the owners; (3) against the master.⁸⁷

2. LIBEL IN REM⁸⁸ — a. Rights Enforceable by — (i) LIENS ON FOREIGN VESSELS. A libel in rem in the admiralty court is the ancient and customary method of enforcing the lien of a materialman given him by the marine law under the circumstances heretofore discussed.⁸⁹

In The Olga, 32 Fed. 329, the same judge applied the law of the place of contract as far as the claims of parties not connected with the vessel were concerned, and the law of the flag by comity as among those connected with the vessel.

a libel in rem lies to enforce it in the admiralty court, and in fact is the only method of enforcing it as a maritime lien.⁹⁰ In such case, as the admiralty court takes cognizance of it simply on the ground of its being by nature a maritime lien regardless of its origin in state enactment, the court enforces it as an admiralty court according to admiralty procedure unaffected by any provisions of the state statute as to procedure.⁹¹ But even when a local statute gives a lien, it is not enforceable in admiralty when the supreme court, under the power conferred upon it by statute to regulate the proceedings in the inferior courts, so frames its rules as to deny a procedure in rem in such cases. Under the present form of the Admiralty Rule No. 12 such liens are enforceable.⁹²

b. Time of Instituting. The doctrine as to the period after which a lien cannot be enforced has been discussed in another connection.⁹³ The fact that suit is instituted before the maturity of a credit given, that is, before the debt is due, does not necessarily involve a dismissal of the libel. The court may deal with such act as a question of costs, although it would not enter any final decree until the expiration of the credit.⁹⁴

c. Form and Requisites of. Omitting the usual caption⁹⁵ and verification,⁹⁶

Although the claimant also has a shipwright's possessory lien, a lien under a state statute of a maritime nature is thus enforceable. The B. F. Woolsey, 7 Fed. 108.

But unless the statute creates a lien and that lien is by nature maritime, it is not enforceable by libel in rem. See supra, VII, B, 3, b, (II). See also Boon v. The Hornet, 3 Fed. Cas. No. 1,640, Crabbe 426; Stapp v. The Swallow, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,305, 1 Bon. 189; Wick v. The Samuel Strong, 30 Fed. Cas. No. 17,607, 6 McLean 587, Newb. Adm. 187.

91. Davis v. A New Brig, 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,643, Gilp. 473.

92. Although in The St. Lawrence, 1 Black (U. S.) 522, 17 L. ed. 180, the supreme court treated the maritime lien as a mere question of procedure, the later cases treat it as a jus in re or proprietary interest. See supra, II, A. Hence when Admiralty Rule No. 12 was amended to give a procedure in rem, it was not retroactive. The Circassian, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,726, 11 Blatchf. 472; In re Kirkland, 14 Fed. Cas. No. 7,842, holding that the contrary was based on The St. Lawrence, supra, and is not sustainable under the later cases.

93. Necessity of compliance with provisions of local statutes see supra, VII, B, 6, b, (I).

General doctrine of limitations in admiralty see supra, VIII, A, 3, b. See also Barstow v. The Aurelia, 45 Oreg. 285, 77 Pac. 835.

If the prescribed limit of enforcement has not expired when suit was commenced, its expiration during the pendency of suit is immaterial. Read v. Hull of a New Brig, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,609, 1 Story 244 [affirming 4 Fed. Cas. No. 2,316, 2 Ware 37].

94. In The Ella, 84 Fed. 471, where suit was brought before the maturity of a note given for the work, the court treated it as a question of costs. See also The Pioneer, 53 Fed. 279; The Papa, 46 Fed. 576. On the other hand in The John Walls, Jr., 113 Fed. Cas. No. 7,432, 1 Sprague 178, Judge Sprague held that where a credit was given, a libel could not be sustained till its expiration. The credit was for six months and the libel had been filed within twenty days after furnishing the supplies. Under such a hasty procedure, he dismissed the libel as to that part of the account not due. He cites as authority The Nestor, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,126, 1 Sumn. 73, and The Chusan, 5 Fed. Cas. No. 2,717, 2 Story 455. Neither one of these cases is in point. Where the proceeding was so premature and unnecessary as to amount to an abuse of the court's process and put the vessel owner to trouble and loss in arranging for bond, the court could doubtless dismiss the libel. In The Richard Busted, 20 Fed. Cas. No. 11,764, 1 Sprague 441, Judge Sprague, passing upon a suit in admiralty to enforce a lien created by the Massachusetts statute, held that the sixty-day period allowed before instituting proceedings was intended to apply to the state courts alone, not to the admiralty court. He based his ruling upon the language of the Massachusetts supreme court in Tyler v. Currier, 10 Gray (Mass.) 54.

If time is extended by notes given with fraudulent intent, the lien may be enforced before they fall due. Chester Rolling-Mills v. The Hopatcong, 1 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 567, 6 N. Y. Suppl. 215 [affirmed in 127 N. Y. 206, 27 N. E. 841].

a form of a libel for supplies, repairs, or other necessities,⁹⁷ which has been in use in the eastern district of Virginia for many years and has withstood all attacks, is as follows: "To the Honorable [Edmund Waddill, Jr.] Judge of the Court aforesaid: The libel of [Charles J. Colonna] of the [City] of [Norfolk] and State of [Virginia], against the [Steamer America] of [New York] whereof [John Jones] is or lately was Master, her tackle, apparel and furniture, and against all persons intervening for their interest therein, in a cause of contract, civil and maritime, alleges as follows.⁹⁸ 1. That during the [month] of [October] of the year [1905], the said [Steamer] being in the harbor of [Norfolk, Virginia], and being as to libellant a [foreign]⁹⁹ vessel and standing in need of certain [repairs]¹ the libellant, at the request of the master and owners of said [steamer] or their agents furnished to her certain [repairs].² That the schedule hereto annexed and prayed to be made a part of this libel is a just and true statement of the said [repairs].³ That the charges in the said schedule are just and reasonable, and that said [repairs] were necessary and proper, and were furnished on the credit of the vessel as well as of her owners,⁴ and constitute a lien thereon, whether by the general maritime law, or by the statute of [Virginia].⁵ 2. That there is now due to the said libellant on account of said [repairs] the sum of [($86.78) Eighty-six 78/100 dollars] with interest thereon as shown by the schedule aforesaid, which although often demanded has not yet been paid. 3. That the said vessel is now in the [Eastern] district of [Virginia]. 4. That all and singular the premises are true, and within the Admiralty and Maritime jurisdiction of the

97. The form was originally prepared by the author to serve both against foreign and domestic vessels, the words and figures in brackets [] show the method of filling up the blanks in the printed form. These must of course be varied to suit the special case.

98. Preliminary.—The location of the materialman and the hailing port of the vessel should be given so as to show whether the claim is on a foreign or domestic lien.

99. If the suit is on a domestic lien, the word "foreign" should be changed to "domestic."

1. If the claim is for supplies or advances or other necessities of any character, the word "repairs" should be altered accordingly.

2. The allegation that the repairs were furnished "at the request of the master and owners of said steamer or their agents" is intended to make the form fit all possible cases, whether by the master, the owners personally, any authorized member of the crew, or an authorized charterer. It is sufficient under the decisions, it being only necessary to show the authority of the party ordering. The Augusta, 2 Fed. Cas. No. 647; The Walkyrien, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,092, 11 Blatchf. 241. See also the following cases:

Wisconsin.—Haney v. The Rosabelle, 17 Wis. 392.

3. The schedule should be itemized, and, being made a part of the libel, obviates any further particularity. In fact it is not strictly necessary to set the account out in full detail. Whitlock v. The Thales, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,578, 20 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 447; Richardson v. Cleaveland, 5 Port. (Ala.) 251.

4. The allegation "standing in need of certain repairs" coupled with the further allegation that they were "necessary and proper and were furnished on the credit of the vessel" is a sufficient allegation of the necessity for the repairs and necessity for credit which gives rise to the maritime lien. In Brown v. The Albany, 4 Fed. Cas. No. 1,987, Judge Betts held that the libel should also allege that the owner had no other credit or funds except the credit of the vessel. He based his ruling on Pratt v. Reed, 19 How. (U. S.) 359, 15 L. ed. 660, then recently decided. But later decisions have much restricted this case, so that it is no longer law. See supra, VII, B, 4, a, (1), (A), (B), (C).

5. The allegation that the repairs "constitute a lien thereon, whether by the general maritime law or the statute of Virginia," is correct, although inartificial. The form was prepared before the decisions were as strong as at present against the right of a state statute to regulate liens on foreign vessels. See supra, VII, B, 3, b, (11), (c). If the claim is against a foreign vessel, the allegation as to the state statute is surplusage. A claim under the general law may be amended to a claim under a state law, but an amendment is unnecessary, as it only affects the source of title, not its character, and is a mere allegation of law. The Samuel Marshall, 49 Fed. 754 [affirmed in 54 Fed.

They cannot obtain affirmative relief by answer.⁷

d. Process on. Under Supreme Court Admiralty Rule No. 1 the first step in an admiralty case is filing the libel. Until this is done no process can issue under the express provisions of the rule. Under Supreme Court Admiralty Rule No. 9 the process in an action in rem is a warrant of arrest of the property, under which the marshal seizes it. This rule requires public notice of the seizure, the return-day and the hearing day to be given by publication in a newspaper to be designated by the court. A seizure or some other submission of the vessel to the jurisdiction of the court is necessary to the exercise of jurisdiction.⁸ Such seizure is itself constructive notice to all parties claiming any right, title, or interest in the vessel, and is sufficient to bring all parties into court, at least to the extent of protecting a decree in the cause from collateral attack. The requirement as to publication is not jurisdictional.⁹ Although the lien may have been waived except as against a fractional interest in the vessel, the entire vessel 396, 4 C. C. A. 385]. On the other hand, if the claim is against a domestic vessel, the allegation as to the general maritime law is surplusage. In Parmlee v. The Charles Mears, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,766, Newb. Adm. 197 (an old case holding a shipbuilding contract to be maritime), it was held necessary to set out the local statute relied on. But a federal court is not an alien court in the district of its session. It takes judicial notice of the public state laws, and matters of law need not be pleaded. Liverpool, etc., Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 S. Ct. 469, 32 L. ed. 788. It is only requisite to aver the facts necessary to bring the case under the terms of the statute. The Julia Sherwood, 8 Fed. 366; Allman v. Ripley, 39 Ala. 351. In one respect the form might not suffice. Suppose a New York vessel contracts a bill for supplies in New York, and is subsequently libeled in Virginia. Here the lien arises under the New York statute. This, being a foreign law in the forum where suit is brought, is to be proved as a fact. Liverpool, etc., Steam Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co., 129 U. S. 397, 9 S. Ct. 469, 32 L. ed. 788. Hence it would be better pleading in such case to set it out in the libel or at least aver positively the existence of a statute and the fact that it gives a lien for the character of claim asserted in the libel.

6. The remaining allegations of the form are common to any libel in rem, and intended to meet the requirements of Supreme Court Admiralty Rule 23, as follows: “All libels in instance causes, civil or maritime, shall state the nature of the cause; as, for example, that it is a cause, civil and maritime, of contract, or of tort or damage, or of salvage, or of possession, or otherwise, as the case may be; and, if the libel be in rem, that the property is within the district; and, if in personam, the names and occupations and places of residence of the parties. The libel shall also propound and articulate in distinct articles the various allegations of fact upon which the libellant relies in support of his suit, so that the defendant may be enabled to answer distinctly and separately the several matters contained in each article; and it shall conclude with a prayer of due process to enforce his rights, in rem or in personam (as the case may require), and for such relief and redress as the court is competent to give in the premises. And the libellant may further require the defendant to answer on oath all interrogatories propounded by him touching all and singular the allegations in the libel at the close or conclusion thereof.”

7. Ward v. Chamberlain, 21 How. (U. S.) 572, 16 L. ed. 219; Hawgood, etc., Transit Co. v. Dingman, 94 Fed. 1011, 36 C. C. A. 627.

Filing a cross libel is not a waiver of any defense to the original libel. The Electron, 74 Fed. 689, 21 C. C. A. 12.

8. Bruce v. Murray, 123 Fed. 366, 59 C. C. A. 494; Ham v. The Hamburg, 2 Iowa 460.

9. Daily v. Doe, 3 Fed. 903. This case reviews many decisions, but they are mainly in cases not of an admiralty nature. See, however, Page v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 268, 20 L. ed. 135; The Mary, 9 Cranch (U. S.) 126, 3 L. ed. 678.

may be seized to enforce the lien against such fractional interest, the lien and the vessel being in their nature indivisible.¹⁰ A vessel under contract of construction for the United States after a trial trip is subject to seizure if the title and possession are still in the contractor. Even the fact that the title is in the United States would not prevent seizure in an action in rem if it does not interfere with the possession of the government; as the latter takes cum onere.¹¹ But under the comity prevailing between courts a vessel in the actual custody of a court on valid process cannot be seized under admiralty process.¹²

e. Defense to — (i) IN GENERAL. Any one whose interest in the vessel or dividend out of the proceeds of sale would be affected may appear and defend an asserted lien. This may be done: (1) By exception for matters of law or answer for matters of fact;¹³ or (2) by petition of intervention.¹⁴

(ii) BY EXCEPTION FOR MATTERS OF LAW OR ANSWER FOR MATTERS OF FACT. This is the usual method for parties having any title in the vessel. For instance a charterer may defend on the ground that the credit was not given to the vessel.¹⁵ So too a mortgagee¹⁶ or a shipwright having a possessory lien may defend.¹⁷

(iii) BY PETITION OF INTERVENTION. In admiralty practice an answer or defensive pleading is preceded by a claim, and presupposes that the party setting it up can, if he so elects, by interposing the claim, take possession of the vessel on giving the proper bond.¹⁸ But if the vessel is not bonded and the libellant thus relegated to a decree against the stipulators, a sale of the vessel in case of a ruling for the libellant is inevitable. In such case petitions of intervention are filed under the Supreme Court Admiralty Rule No. 43,¹⁹ and there may ensue a general scramble among the petitioners as to their relative rights and priorities, each being entitled to dispute the other's claim. But the only parties entitled to interfere under this rule are those having an interest in, that is, a lien or charge upon, the proceeds, maritime or otherwise. Hence a mortgagee may intervene under this rule, and his lien will be assigned its proper rank.²⁰ So the holder of a common-law or statutory title to, interest in, or lien upon, a vessel may intervene

But some notice beyond the mere seizure is usually required by the state statutes. The Hilton v. Miller, 62 Ill. 230; The Clarion v. Moran, 18 Ill. 501; Turner v. Friend, 59 Me. 290.

But the court cannot compel the mortgagee to appear and defend. Schuchardt v. The Angelique, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,483a [affirmed in 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,483c].

17. The Two Marys, 16 Fed. 697.

But a stipulator on the bond is not a party defendant. Witherspoon v. Wallis, 2 Ala. 667.

18. Supreme Court Admiralty Rule No. 26; The Two Marys, 12 Fed. 152.

19. This rule is as follows: "Any person having any interest in any proceeds in the registry of the court shall have a right, by petition and summary proceeding, to intervene pro interesse suo for delivery thereof to him; and upon due notice to the adverse parties, if any, the court shall and may proceed summarily to hear and decide thereon, and to decree therein according to right and justice. And if such petition or claim shall be deserted, or, upon a hearing, be dismissed, the court may, in its discretion, award costs against the petitioner in favor of the adverse party."

20. The Gordon Campbell, 131 Fed. 963; The Acme, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 28, 7 Blatchf. 366 [reversing 1 Fed. Cas. No. 27, 2 Ben. 386]; The Island City, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,109, 1 Lowell 375; The Syracuse, 23 Fed. Cas. No. 13,716, 9 Ben. 348.

under this rule and protect his interest, although that interest is not maritime.²¹ In considering these petitions a court of admiralty acts upon equitable principles. Having a fund in its custody it must see that the fund is paid to its rightful owners; and hence it must consider and decide who are its owners. This necessarily involves the consideration of any claim asserting a vested right in the vessel or its proceeds.²² Hence one who has a mere personal claim against the owner cannot intervene, as such a claim is not an interest in the proceeds, and to admit such a claim would be to try ordinary common-law controversies in an admiralty court and deprive the owner of his right to a trial by jury.²³

f. Evidence.²⁴ The general rule as to presumptions for or against a lien has already been discussed.²⁵

3. LIBEL IN PERSONAM. This is not a means of enforcing a lien but a personal suit in the admiralty court against the owner, master, or other party personally liable.²⁶

21. Thus a receiver appointed in another state in a suit to wind up the affairs of a corporation owning the vessel. The Willamette Valley, 76 Fed. 838. Conversely a party having an admiralty lien may intervene and defend in a state court proceeding. Hawes v. Mitchell, 15 Gray (Mass.) 234. So the furnisher of materials for the original construction of a vessel, if given a lien by the state law. The Guiding Star, 18 Fed. 263 [affirming 9 Fed. 521]; Petrie v. The Coal Bluff No. 2, 3 Fed. 531; Francis v. The Harrison, 9 Fed. Cas. No. 5,938, 2 Abb. 74, 1 Sawy. 353; Harper v. New Brig, 11 Fed. Cas. No. 6,090, Gilp. 536. In McCaskey v. Coal Bluff No. 2, 15 Fed. Cas. No. 8,687, such a claim was disallowed as a maritime lien, and the commissioner passing upon it intimated that it could not be recognized in the distribution of the proceeds; but in this he is wrong. See Petrie v. The Coal Bluff No. 2, supra. So claimants of liens under a state law. The Island City, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,109, 1 Lowell 375; The Lady Franklin, 14 Fed. Cas. In view of these authorities the intimation in The Fanny, 8 Fed. Cas. No. 4,637, that no one can intervene unless he has a claim enforceable in admiralty is not sustainable.

No. 5,233, 1 Pet. Adm. 223. A judgment obtained in a state court constitutes no lien if execution is not levied before the admiralty proceedings; for execution cannot be served on a court or its officers. Wilson v. Bell, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 201, 22 L. ed. 259; In re Forsyth, 78 Fed. 296; The Willamette Valley, 76 Fed. 838; The Balize, 52 Fed. 414. So where a local statute gives no lien but a mere right of arrest, a claimant under it has no standing as an intervener. The Velocity, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,911. There are a few cases allowing the holder of a mere personal claim against the owner to intervene. Delano v. The J. Walls Jr., 7 Fed. Cas. No. 3,752 (a claim for supplies not constituting a lien and also on a broken promise of consignment); The Monongahela, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 9,712, 5 Biss. 131 (a claim for master's wages); The Santa Anna, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,325, Blatchf. & H. 79; The Stephen Allen, 22 Fed. Cas. No. 13,361, Blatchf. & H. 175 (a claim for master's wages). These, however, are practically overruled by Wilson v. Bell, supra, as shown by Mr. Justice Jackson in The Balize, 52 Fed. 414.

An intervener cannot question the method of distribution as between two lienors prior to himself when he cannot be reached in any event. The John T. Moore, 13 Fed. Cas. No. 7,430, 3 Woods 61.

In distributing the proceeds the liens are charged proportionately upon the shares of the part-owners. In re Wright, 16 Fed. 482.

4. PROCEEDINGS IN NON-MARITIME FORUM—a. In Chancery or Bankruptcy Courts. Frequently a chancery or bankruptcy court in administering a fund or marshaling liens takes cognizance of admiralty liens as a means of making a proper distribution of the fund.²⁷

b. In Other Courts. It has been seen that many of the states have statutes creating liens on domestic vessels and providing remedies in their courts for enforcing such liens. It has also been seen that such statutes are valid in so far as they do not attempt to provide a pure proceeding in rem for the enforcement of such of those liens as are maritime.²⁸ But when such remedies are on the safe side of the prohibited line, it is because they are enforcing those liens as state statutory liens, not as maritime liens; for a maritime lien as such is not and cannot be enforceable in any other than a maritime court. Hence the procedure under these various state statutes is not properly within the scope of this treatise, but is rather a branch of pleading or procedure under the statutes of the several states.²⁹

29. Already in this treatise nearly all of the state decisions have been arranged under what seemed to the author to be the natural and appropriate places therefor. Those relating to the validity of state statutes have been treated supra, VII, B, 3, b. Those relating to the steps necessary to perfect and preserve the lien created will be found supra, VII, B, 6. Those relating to the effect of bonding a vessel are grouped supra under VIII, F. There are, however, a few state decisions still remaining unclassified which merely construe the special language of particular statutes, many of which have been subsequently amended, or discuss special questions under such statutes. Although not involving principles pertinent to the doctrine of maritime liens they are inserted for convenience of reference.

I. NATURE AND ESSENTIALS IN GENERAL.

A. Definition. In the law "marriage" may mean either the acts, agreements, or ceremony by which two persons enter into wedlock, or their subsequent relation created thereby.¹ In the latter sense, it is the civil status or personal relation of one man and one woman joined together in a matrimonial union which was lawfully entered into, is intended to continue during their joint lives, is not dissoluble by their consent or agreement, and which involves the reciprocal rights and obligations imposed by law on such a union.² It is now the commonly accepted doctrine that marriage is a civil contract, requiring only the free and Compare Com. v. Nesbit, 34 Pa. St. 398, where it is said that marriage is not purely a civil but also a religious contract.

tion.⁵ The contract to marry, contemplating a future actual marriage, is indeed an executory agreement having many of the characteristics of ordinary contracts, although differing from other contracts in essential particulars, and terminating with the actual nuptials.⁶ But marriage in the sense of the completed matrimonial engagement is unlike any other contract known to the law chiefly because it cannot be terminated or dissolved by the parties, but only by the sovereign power of the state. Nor can its mutual rights and obligations be modified by agreement.⁷ In truth, whatever contractual elements it may contain, these are important only in its inception; for once entered upon it becomes a relation rather than a contract, and invests each party with a status toward the other and society at large, involving duties and responsibilities which are no longer matter for private regulation but concern the commonwealth.⁸ And in this aspect marriage is a civil or social institution, publici juris, being the foundation of the

6. A contract for a future marriage resembles other contracts in that an action for damages will lie for its breach. See BREACH OF PROMISE TO MARRY, 5 Cyc. 999, 1018. And it may involve the regulation of the respective property rights of the parties after they are married. See HUSBAND AND WIFE, 21 Cyc. 1243 et seq. But whereas infants are precluded from entering into most of the ordinary business contracts, the age of consent to a marriage contract is fixed by common law or statutes at an earlier period than that of legal majority for other purposes. See infra, II, A. And see Wade v. Kalbfleisch, 58 N. Y. 282, 17 Am. Rep. 250; White v. White, 4 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 102; Randall v. Krieger, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 137, 23 L. ed. 124. Again, unlike the case of an ordinary contract, the courts will not compel the specific performance of a contract to marry. Eversley Law Dom. Rel. 127. So also the laws against miscegenation impose a limitation as to this particular contract which does not obtain in ordinary dealings between people of different races. See infra, II, E. And as to the validity of such laws as an exercise of the police power see State v. Gibson, 36 Ind. 389, 10 Am. Rep. 42; Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, 16 S. Ct. 1138, 41 L. ed. 256; and CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8 Cyc. 1074. Unlike ordinary contracts, which may be limited in point of time as the parties may agree, the contract to marry can only be entered into with a view to the continuance of the marital relation through life. Letters v. Cady, 10 Cal. 533; Peck v. Peck, 155 Mass. 479, 30 N. E. 74; Randall's Case, 5 City Hall Rec. (N. Y.) 141. Nor is a contract to marry within the prohibition of a statute relating to Sunday contracts. Com. v. Nesbit, 34 Pa. St. 398. Neither is this contract within the family and the origin of domestic relations of the utmost importance to civilization and social progress; hence the state is deeply concerned in its maintenance in purity and integrity.⁹

B. Power to Regulate and Control. The legislature of each state has authority, with respect to the matrimonial contracts of its own citizens, to regulate the qualifications of the contracting parties, the forms or proceedings essential to constitute a marriage, the duties and obligations it creates, its effect upon property rights, and the causes for its dissolution.¹⁰ It is also within the legislative power to validate or confirm, by statute, a marriage which was voidable on account of some statutory disability or the neglect of some statutory requisite.¹¹

S. 486, 27 Wkly. Rep. 203. In the case last cited it was said: "Marriage is the fulfilment of a contract satisfied by the solemnization of the marriage, but marriage directly it exists creates by law a relation between the parties and what is called the status of each. The status of an individual, used as a legal term, means the legal position of the individual in or with regard to the rest of a community. That relation between the parties, and that status of each of them with regard to the community, which are constituted upon marriage, are not imposed or defined by contract or agreement but by law."

Consent the only contractual element.—The supreme court of the United States, in speaking of marriage as a contract, said: "Perhaps the only element of a contract, in the ordinary acceptation of the term, that exists is that the consent of the parties is necessary to create the relation." Randall v. Krieger, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 137, 147, 23 L. ed. 124.

Marriage a domestic relation.—Marriage, although entered into by a contract, establishes between the parties a social or domestic relation, that of husband and wife, the obligations of which do not arise from the consent of concurring minds, but are the creations of the law. Adams v. Palmer, 51 Me. 480; Ditson v. Ditson, 4 R. I. 87; Cook v. Cook, 56 Wis. 195, 14 N. W. 33, 443, 43 Am. Rep. 706.

C. What Law Governs—1. IN GENERAL. The validity of a marriage is determined by the law of the place where it was contracted or celebrated, and if valid there it will, generally, be held valid in any state or country in which the parties may subsequently reside,¹⁴ although it would have been invalid by the law of such subsequent domicile if contracted there,¹⁵ and, according to some authorities, even where the parties left the state of their domicile and went to a foreign state or country and were there married, for the purpose of evading Rule more broadly stated.—In a few decisions it has been broadly stated that the rule making the validity of a marriage depend on the law of the place where it was contracted does not apply if that law is repugnant to the religion, the morality, or the municipal institutions of the country where it is sought to be applied. *Eubanks v. Where parties have different domiciles.—Two natives of Portugal, one of whom was domiciled in England, the other in Portugal, contracted a marriage in England in 1866. They were first cousins, and were incapable, according to the law of Portugal, of intermarrying, on account of consanguinity, without a papal dispensation. The petitioner, the wife, filed a petition praying that her marriage with the respondent might be declared null and void, and it was held that the lex loci contractus should prevail in the matter; and the marriage being valid according to the law of England the court dismissed the petition. Sottomayor v. De Barros, 5 P. D. 94, 49 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 1, 41 L. T. Rep. N. S. 281, 27 Wkly. Rep. 917.

Marrying deceased wife's sister.—In England, where this is contrary to law, a marriage between persons occupying this relation was held void, although celebrated abroad and valid by the lex loci contractus. *Brook v. any state or country if void by the law of the place where contracted.¹⁸ But the law governing the civil consequences of a marriage, as distinguished from the contract by which it is entered into, including the reciprocal rights and obligations of the parties and the causes for which the marriage may be dissolved, is that which obtains in the domicile of the parties.¹⁹ In the absence of statutory provisions regulating marriage, in either of these particulars, the principles of the common law of England will be applied.²⁰

2. INDIAN CUSTOMS. The North American Indians continuing in their tribal relations, although within the territorial jurisdiction of a state, are not subject to its laws in respect of such matters as their domestic relations; and hence a marriage between Indians, valid by their laws and customs, is recognized as valid, although it would not have satisfied the requirements of the state law.²¹

3. LAW OF FOREIGN STATES AND COUNTRIES. As above stated, the validity of a marriage is to be determined by the law of the place where it was celebrated;²² and consequently, if contested in another state or country the lex loci contractus will be inquired into, and as a general rule the marriage is held valid or void according as it complied or failed to comply with the law.²³ There are, however, decisions holding a marriage to be valid which would be good by the common law or jus gentium, although some provisions of the local law, particularly in matters of form or ceremonial, were not obeyed;²⁴ and an exception to the general rule is made in the case of contracting parties both of whom were aliens in the jurisdiction where they were married and who were so situated that it was not possible for them to comply with the local law.²⁵ An American citizen temporarily resident in a foreign country may be lawfully married in the presence of any consular officer of the United States, although the ceremony is not in accordance with the law of that country.²⁶ In England in order to remove doubts as to the validity of certain foreign marriages, it was provided by statute that marriages solemnized by a minister of the church of England in the chapel or house of any British ambassador or minister, or in the chapel of any British factory, should be valid;²⁷ and a similar provision was made with regard to marriages solemnized within the British lines by any chaplain or officer, or any person officiating under the orders of a commanding officer of a British army serving abroad.²⁸

D. Requisites of Valid Marriage—1. CONSENT OF PARTIES AND INTENTION TO MARRY—a. Necessity in General. To constitute a valid marriage, it must be

Place of contract immaterial.—A marriage contracted between Indians and according to the customs of their tribe need not be contracted in the reservation or territory of the tribe in order to be valid. La Rivière v. La Rivière, 97 Mo. 80, 10 S. W. 840; Boyer v. Dively, 58 Mo. 510. But see Banks v. Galbraith, 149 Mo. 529, 51 S. W. 105, holding that where an Indian woman leaves the Indian country and goes to Missouri with her parents and is there sold to a white man, and she lives with him in Missouri, the relation created is governed by the laws of Missouri and not by Indian customs.

Marriage of Indian and white.—The marriage of a white man and an Indian woman according to the laws and customs of her tribe, but not conforming to state law, was held valid in Johnson v. Johnson, 30 Mo. 72, 77 Am. Dec. 598, but void in Follansbee v. Wilbur, 14 Wash. 242, 44 Pac. 262; Wilbur v. Bingham, 8 Wash. 35, 35 Pac. 407, 40 Am. St. Rep. 886.

Federal legislation.—Although the act of congress of Feb. 8, 1887 (24 U. S. St. at L. 390) declares Indians receiving allotments in severalty thereunder to be citizens of the United States and subject to the laws of the state in which they live yet under the direct provisions of the act of congress of Feb. 28, 1891 (26 U. S. St. at L. 794) the issue of a male and female Indian who cohabited as husband and wife according to the custom of Indian life are deemed legitimate for the purpose of determining the descent of land. *Kalyton v. Marriage in foreign church.—A marriage solemnized at Antwerp between two English persons in the British church, by a protestant clergyman appointed by the English government, but without performance of the Belgian ceremonies, is void, as being contrary to the lex loci, and not coming within 9 Geo. IV, c. 91, which permits marriages abroad at an ambassador's or at a factory chapel. Kent v. Burgess, 5 Jur. 166, 10 L. J. Ch. 100, 11 Sim. 361, 34 Eng. Ch. 361, 59 Eng. Reprint 913.

b. Effect of Fraud. Fraud or falsehood going to the essentials or fundamentals of the marital relation will deprive the contract of that intelligent consent necessary to its validity, and hence will render the marriage voidable at the instance of the injured party.³³ marriage of an officer celebrated by a chaplain of the British army within the lines of the army when serving abroad was valid, although the army is not serving in a country in a state of actual hostility, and although no authority for the marriage was previously obtained from the officer superior in command. Understanding of parties.—To constitute marriage, it is only necessary that there should exist an agreement to be husband and wife, followed by cohabitation as such, without regard to what the parties considered the legal effect of the agreement to be. Tartt v. Negus, 127 Ala. 301, 28 So. 713.

Secret reservations.—The consent of the parties to the alleged marriage is to be determined by what took place at the time of its celebration, and is not affected by a secret reservation of one of the parties. *Imboden v. Intoxication at the time of the marriage will render it voidable, if such in degree as to render the party incapable of understanding the nature and consequence of his acts and hence make him incapable of intelligent consent. Prine v. Brooke, 60 Md. 524, where the man, just before the marriage ceremony, declared that he consented to it, but that he would never live with the woman; but as a matter of fact he did, and was the father of her children, and it was held that the marriage was valid.

Mistake as to person.—The marriage is vitiated, for lack of the intention spoken of in the text, by a mistake in the identity of one of the persons. Delpit v. Young, 51 La. Ann. 923, 25 So. 547. And see other cases cited infra, VIII, B, 7.

Mistake as to nature of ceremony.—So also an entire mistake as to the nature or legal consequences of the ceremony, one of the parties having no actual and present intention of marriage, will avoid it. *Blumenthal v. c. Effect of Duress. Consent extorted by duress is of course of no value in the making of a valid marriage; and therefore if one of the parties is coerced into the marriage by physical compulsion, abduction, or threats of such a nature as to inspire terror and subjugate the will, it is no lawful marriage.³⁴

2. CONSENT OF PARENTS AND GUARDIANS—a. In General. Although the rule was otherwise at common law,³⁵ by statutes now in force in practically all of the states the consent of parents or guardians is necessary to the lawful marriage of an infant.³⁶ The age of majority for this purpose is commonly fixed

Promotion of marriage by third person.—It would seem that a combination amongst persons, friendly to a woman, to induce a man to consent to marry her, it not being shown that she has done anything to procure her friends to do any improper act in order to bring about the consent, will not avoid the marriage. *Roblin v. 36. See the statutes of the various states. Apparently the only exceptions to this rule are found in Alaska, Idaho, New Hampshire, and New York, where the statutes are silent on this point.

Law in Canada.—The statute called Lord Hardwicke's Act (26 Geo. III, c. 33, § 2) by which the marriage of a minor by license without the consent of the parent or guardian was absolutely void, is not in force in Canada. Lawless v. Chamberlain, 18 Ont. 296. And see Reg. v. Roblin, 21 U. C. Q. B. 352; Reg. v. Bell, 15 U. C. Q. B. 287; Reg. v. Secker, 14 U. C. Q. B. 604.

Marriage of indentured servants.—An ancient statute of Pennsylvania prohibited the marriage of indentured servants without the consent of their masters; but this was held not to include apprentices. Altemus v. Ely, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 305.

Marriage of minor and adult.—The statutes referred to are not limited in their application to cases where both the parties are minors, but apply equally where one of them is of age. Cotten v. Rutledge, 33 Ala. 110; Caroon v. Rogers, 51 N. C. 240.

To whom consent given.—The statutes commonly require that the consent of the parent or guardian shall be given to the officer issuing the license, or, as in Alabama, to the judge of probate. Fitzsimmons v. Buckley, 59 Ala. 539.

Abduction of infant by marriage without consent of parent or guardian see ABDUCTION. 1 Cyc. 142 note 7, 147 note 41.

In England, upon committing the custody of an infant to the care of a committee, it was usual to provide that she should not at twenty-one years for the male and eighteen for the female, although there are some local variations; and the consent is ordinarily required to be given by the father if living, or by the mother in case of his death, or by the guardian of an orphan.³⁷ It is seldom, if at all, that a court will interfere to dispense with such consent, or substitute its own consent, even though it appointed and has control of the minor's guardian.³⁸ The parent's or guardian's consent is usually required to be manifested in a particular manner, although there are cases in which it may be made out by implication or estoppel.³⁹ Unless the statute expressly declares a marriage contracted without the necessary consent to be a nullity, it is to be construed as only directory in this respect, so that the marriage will be valid, although the disobedience to the statute may entail penalties on the licensing or officiating authorities.⁴⁰ It is also held that, although a marriage so marry without leave of court (Tombes v. Elers, Dick. 88, 21 Eng. Reprint 201; Beard v. Travers, 1 Ves. 313, 27 Eng. Reprint 1052), and to require a recognizance from the committee to such effect (Eyre v. Shaftsbury, 2 P. Wms. 103, 24 Eng. Reprint 659; Davis' Case, 1 P. Wms. 698, 24 Eng. Reprint 577).

37. Parent or guardian.—In Vermont the statute is construed as requiring the consent of a parent if there be one living. Holgate v. Cheney, Brayt. (Vt.) 158. But in Missouri a parent cannot give the required consent if the minor has a guardian. Vaughn v. McQueen, 9 Mo. 330.

As between parents.—In case of a difference between the parents as to the marriage of a minor child, the authority of the father prevails. Bosworth v. Beiller, 2 La. Ann. 293. And the consent of the mother is not sufficient where the father is also living, although he is absent from the state (Riley v. Bell, 89 Ala. 597, 7 So. 155), although it is not known where he is and it is supposed that he is dead (Hayes v. Watts, 3 Phillim. 43), or although the father's immoral conduct has been such as to show him an unfit guardian of his children and to give his wife grounds for divorce (Ely v. Gammel, 52 Ala. 584).

Stepfather.—A stepfather is not the natural guardian of the minor child, and his consent is not necessary to the validity of her marriage. People v. Schoonmaker, 117 Mich. 190, 75 N. W. 439, 72 Am. St. Rep. 560.

Interference of third persons.—Under our statutes, it is probable that no persons other than those named (parents and guardians) have any right to forbid or oppose the marriage of the minor in any form of legal proceedings. In the case of Lee v. Hutton, 14 Jur. 638, the question was raised, but not decided, whether third persons, having an interest opposed to the marriage of a female infant, were entitled to interfere.

Withdrawal of consent.—Although a father may withdraw his consent to his daughter's marriage at any time previous to the actual solemnization, yet his consent when duly obtained will be upheld, although he died before any preliminary arrangements for the marriage could be settled. Young v. Furse, 2 Jur. N. S. 864, 26 L. J. Ch. 117 [reversed on other grounds in 8 De G. M. & G. 756, 3 Jur. N. S. 603, 26 L. J. Ch. 352, 5 Wkly.

Rep. 394, 57 Eng. Ch. 584; 44 Eng. Reprint 581].

Illegitimate children were within 26 Geo. II, c. 33, which required the consent of the father, guardian, or mother, to the marriage of persons under age, who were not married by banns. Rex v. Hodnett, 1 T. R. 96.

38. See Ex p. Colegrave, 7 L. J. Ch. 236, holding that the court has no power to consent to the marriage of an infant on the ground that her father refuses his consent from undue motives. But in Ex p. Reibey, 12 L. J. Ch. 436, the lord chancellor gave his approval to the marriage of an infant whose guardian resided abroad. On the other hand, in Tombes v. Elers, Dick. 88, 21 Eng. Reprint 201, the court took the care of an infant from her testamentary guardian and ordered her not to marry without leave of court. See also Gordon v. Irwin, 4 Bro. P. C. 355, 2 Eng. Reprint 241. In the case of Shutt v. Carlross, 36 N. C. 232, it is said that it is not the duty of a guardian to apply to the court to authorize the marriage of his female ward, except perhaps in the case of a "ward of the court."

The provision in 4 Geo. IV, c. 76, § 17, for an application to the lord chancellor for consent, does not apply to a father who is beyond the seas, or who unreasonably withholds his consent; but only in a case in which he is non compos mentis. Ex p. I. C., 3 Myl. & C. 471, 14 Eng. Ch. 471, 40 Eng. Reprint 1008.

39. Evans v. Johnson, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 143; Harrison v. Southampton, 4 De G. M. & G. 137, 18 Jur. 1, 22 L. J. Ch. 722, 1 Wkly. Rep. 422, 53 Eng. Ch. 108, 43 Eng. Reprint 459; Re Birch, 17 Beav. 358, 51 Eng. Reprint 1072. But compare Smyth v. State, 13 Ark. 696, holding that the consent of the parent or guardian, if not given in writing, must be manifested by his personal presence at the marriage ceremony.

contracted without the proper consent may be invalid at the beginning, it may be ratified by the cohabitation of the parties after attaining their majority.⁴¹

b. Marriage of Ward of Court. Any interference with a person in the custody of the law is as a general rule regarded as a contempt;⁴² and under this rule in England the marriage of a ward of the chancery court without the consent of the court was regarded as a criminal contempt,⁴³ and in aggravated cases as an indictable offense.⁴⁴ The punishment of such a contempt is discretionary and not barred by lapse of time.⁴⁵ Upon such a marriage the court may cite all the parties concerned to attend upon an inquiry,⁴⁶ including the clergyman who solemnized the marriage,⁴⁷ and may commit the offending husband⁴⁸ or wife,⁴⁹ enjoining any communication with the ward.⁵⁰ It is usual, upon the marriage having been found valid, to discharge the party in contempt, a proper settlement having been executed and the costs paid.⁵¹

But compare Dunbarton v. Franklin, 19 N. H. 257, holding that where parties enter into a contract of marriage and live together in accordance with it, this does not constitute a marriage, but is merely evidence from which a jury may infer a marriage.

In Hawaii it is sufficient to establish the validity of a marriage under the ancient custom, and prior to the law establishing christian marriage, to show that the parties lived together as man and wife. Kamoku v. Kal-aauaha, 4 Hawaii 548.

Scotch marriages.—To constitute a marriage in accordance with the Scotch law there must be a deliberate and serious agreement to marry, given mutually with the view and for the purpose of creating thenceforth the relation of husband and wife, and it is not necessary that the contract so made should be followed by cohabitation, nor is it necessary to show the particular place or the exact day where such consent was exchanged. Yelverton v. Longworth, 10 Jur. N. S. 1209, 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 118, 4 Macq. H. L. 746, 13 Wkly. Rep. 235. For cases in which the validity of Scotch marriages has been considered see Lawford v. Davies, 4 P. Y.) 32, holding that matrimonial cohabitation may be established without proof of any announcement by the parties of their relation further than is given by appearances. But see Maryland v. Baldwin, 112 U. S. 490, 5 S. Ct. 278, 28 L. ed. 822, holding that where a marriage takes place by words only, without attending ceremonies, religious or civil, some public recognition of it, such as living together as man and wife, is necessary as evidence of its existence. And as to the "mutual assumption of marital rights and duties" under the statute in California see Toon v. Huberty, 104 Cal. 260, 37 Pac. 944; Kilburn v. Kilburn, 89 Cal. 46, 26 Pac. 636, 23 Am. St. Rep. 447 (holding that where an agreement to marry is not followed by solemnization, there is no assumption of marital rights, duties, or obligations, within the meaning of section 55 of the California civil code, until the commencement of cohabitation by the parties to the agreement. And by cohabitation is meant, not simply the gratification of the sexual passion, but to live and dwell together, and to have the same habitation); Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131.

Agreement to keep secret.—The validity of a marriage contracted by mutual agreement, even held that the agreement may be implied.⁶² Although the relations of the parties were at first illicit, this does not prevent them from afterward contracting a valid common-law marriage.⁶³ Where a contract of common-law marriage is in writing, the courts have jurisdiction of an action either to establish it and declare it valid or to cancel it.⁶⁴

c. Contracts Per Verba De Præsenti or De Futuro. In regard to marriages effected by the agreement of the parties without solemnization, a distinction is made between contracts per verba de præsenti, that is, where the parties take each other for husband and wife by words in the present tense, implying that the marital relation is constituted immediately and not at some future time, and contracts per verba de futuro, which imply no more than that the parties will marry each other at a later time. Contracts of the former sort have been recognized as creating a present and valid marriage.⁶⁵ But a mere agreement for a future marriage, although followed by cohabitation, is no marriage,⁶⁶ nor is a conditional promise to marry at a future day, although made as an inducement or cloak for meretricious relations.⁶⁷ It is indeed an ancient rule that a marriage may arise from a contract per verba de futuro cum copula;⁶⁸ but in this case, the copula must or by a written contract, is not affected by an agreement of the parties to keep its existence a secret either for an indefinite time or until they shall agree to make it public. Sharon v. Sharon, 79 Cal. 633, 22 Pac. 26, 131; Hamilton v. Hamilton, 9 Cl. & F. 327, 8 Eng. Reprint 440; Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 2 Hagg. Cons. 54; Swift v. Kelly, 3 Knapp 257, 12 Eng. Reprint 648.

Cohabitation in another state.—A marriage entered into by contract between the parties in one state, and followed by cohabitation and recognition of the relation in another, is valid and binding. Goodrich v. Cushman, 34 Nebr. 460, 51 N. W. 1041; Gibson v. Gibson, 24 Nebr. 394, 39 N. W. 450. But compare Peck v. Peck, 155 Mass. 479, 30 N. E. 74.

be in fulfilment of the marriage contract, that is, it must be intended and understood by the parties as a consummation of their marriage and as converting their executory agreement to marry into a present, actual marriage; and if it is known and understood to be illicit, and they regard their contract as still executory and intend that it shall be carried into effect at some future time by a ceremony or solemnization of marriage, their cohabitation is not matrimonial.⁶⁹ As a question of evidence, however, and in accordance with the general presumption of innocence rather than of guilt, such an intention and understanding will be imputed to the parties as will make them husband and wife rather than paramours, if this can be done without violence to the direct evidence.⁷⁰

d. Cohabitation and Repute. A marriage cannot arise from mere cohabitation of two persons who are generally reputed to be man and wife,⁷¹ although such cohabitation and repute are regarded as circumstantial evidence of an agreement by which the parties have entered into the relation of husband and wife,⁷² and may raise a presumption,⁷³ although not a conclusive one of marriage.

4. STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS — a. In General. Statutes requiring marriages to be solemnized in a particular manner or before certain authorized persons or under a license, although they may impose penalties for non-observance, are generally construed as directory only, in so far as this, that a marriage valid at common law, but not celebrated in accordance with the requirements of the statute, will be held valid and binding, unless expressly declared void by the statute.⁷⁴ But in several states the law is so framed that no valid marriage can

b. Ceremonial Marriage. The statutes now commonly designate the persons who shall have authority to celebrate marriages, including civil magistrates as well as ecclesiastics, at the same time providing that no particular form or ceremony shall be necessary except a declaration by the parties that they take each other for husband and wife.⁷⁶ A marriage solemnized in full conformity with the statutes is complete without cohabitation,⁷⁷ and its validity is not affected by a secret intention or reservation of one of the parties, unknown to the other,⁷⁸ nor by their acquiescence in the making and recording of a fraudulent certificate of the marriage, which falsely states the date or other particulars of the ceremony.⁷⁹

Good faith and belief of parties as affecting validity.—The statutes in several of the states provide that no marriage shall be void or voidable for the want of a license or other formality required by law, if either of the parties believed it at the time to be a valid marriage (Burns Rev. St. Ind. § 7295); or that want of authority or qualification in the celebrant shall not invalidate a marriage otherwise valid, if consummated in the belief on the part of either of the parties that it was lawful. *Alaska Civ. California.—Under the law of California, as amended in 1895, consent to marriage must be followed by the solemnization by a person authorized by section 70 of the civil code to solemnize marriages; and a marriage between citizens and residents of California, lacking such solemnization, is illegal and void. Norman v. Norman, 121 Cal. 620, 54 Pac. 143, 66 Am. St. Rep. 74, 42 L. R. A. 343. And the effect of the California civil code, section 55, was held to be that a valid marriage cannot be created by mere consent, but must be followed by solemnization or by

Effect of marriage on previous polygamous relation.—In a case in Utah it appeared that a man who had a legal wife living and undivorced married two other women. Subsequently he went through a formal marriage ceremony with one of the women before a justice of the peace. He stated that one of his reasons for marrying was to disqualify the woman from testifying in the event of his arrest. After the ceremony he continued to cohabit with the two women as he had previously done. He told a third woman, whom he also married, that he had two plural wives, and also told her about the marriage before the justice of the peace and his reason for it. It was held that the marriage by the justice was ineffectual to disturb the polygamous relation existing between the parties. Riddle v. Riddle, 26 Utah 268, 72 Pac. 1081.

II. PERSONS WHO MAY MARRY.

A. Age. Under the common law infants were permitted to marry at the age of consent,⁸⁰ which in the case of males was fixed at the age of fourteen,⁸¹ and of females at the age of twelve.⁸² The age at which a valid marriage may be contracted has, however, been altered by statute in many jurisdictions,⁸³ or a provision has been made by which a marriage may be declared void where the female is under a certain age.⁸⁴ Statutes of the latter class have been construed to leave the common-law rule otherwise unaltered;⁸⁵ so also a statute which merely defines what persons may be joined in marriage does not abrogate the common-law rule as to the ages at which a valid marriage may be contracted.⁸⁶ Unless expressly made so by statute a marriage, one or both of the parties to which is under the age of consent, is not void, but is voidable at the option of the party under disability.⁸⁷ Where both of the parties are under age, either may disaffirm the marriage upon arriving at the age of consent;⁸⁸ but it may as a general rule be avoided only at the election of a party.⁸⁹ Marriages of infants are

Protection of court in case of void marriage.—Where a girl under twelve was married and immediately declared her ignorance of the nature and consequence of the marriage, and her dissent to it, it was held that a court of equity, on a bill filed by her next friend, might order her to be placed under the protection of the court as a ward, and prohibit defendant from all intercourse or correspondence with her under the penalty of punishment for contempt. *Aymar v. persons and Indians³⁷ is prohibited in many of the states. The effect of these statutes is to render a marriage contrary to their provisions void ab initio.³⁸ Either party may disregard it,³⁹ and neither can derive from it any of the advantages of a lawful marriage,⁴⁰ nor can the offspring of the union.⁴¹ Such statutes are not, however, retroactive.⁴²

F. Slaves. While the institution of slavery existed it was generally held in the slaveholding states that the marriage of slaves was utterly null and void because of the paramount ownership in them as property, their incapacity to make a contract and the incompatibility of the duties and obligations of husband and wife with the relation of slavery,⁴³ and this was the doctrine of the civil law,⁴⁴ although there was a permitted cohabitation called contubernium which brought with it no civil rights.⁴⁵ The marriage of a fugitive slave in a non-slaveholding state, however, was not to be questioned as long as actual freedom was main-

Who are white persons.—A person having but one-sixteenth of Indian blood is a white person and his marriage with a mulatto is within a statute prohibiting the marriage of a white person with any negro, Indian, or mulatto. Bailey v. Fiske, 34 Me. 77.

Who are negroes.—A woman who has less than one-fourth negro blood is not a negro. McPherson v. Com., 28 Gratt. (Va.) 939.

Who are mulattoes.—A mulatto is a person begotten between a white and a black, and the issue of a mulatto and a white person is not within a statute declaring the marriage of a white person with a mulatto null and void. Medway v. Natick, 7 Mass. 88.

A common-law marriage between a white person and a negro is prohibited by such statutes. Keen v. Keen, 184 Mo. 358, 83 S. W. 526. But see Dickerson v. Brown, 49 Miss. 357, holding that where a white man and a colored woman lived together as husband and wife, desiring marriage, but were unable to be married, because the intermarriage of these races was prohibited by law, their union was consummated by Const. (1869) art. 12, § 22, legalizing the relation between persons who, although not married, were living together as husband and wife at the time of its adoption.

A second marriage after death of former spouse is valid. Sneathen v. Sneathen, 104 Mo. 201, 16 S. W. 497, 24 Am. St. Rep. 326, so holding where a woman married believing her former husband to be dead, but on learning that he was alive commenced divorce proceedings which she discontinued on reliable information of his death, and then remarried her second husband.

An existing common-law marriage is sufficient to defeat a subsequent ceremonial marriage. Archer v. Haithcock, 51 N. C. 421. Although it has been held that evidence of cohabitation and repute in another state is founded in mistake,⁵² or although the facts are sufficient to raise a presumption of the death of the former spouse,⁵³ and although the offending party will be protected from criminal prosecution.⁵⁴ It has been held, however, in at least one jurisdiction that such a marriage is merely voidable.⁵⁵ As between the parties to the second marriage the presumption of innocence will prevail over that of the continued existence of the first husband or wife.⁵⁶ Statutes in some jurisdictions provide that where a marriage is contracted before the dissolution of a prior existing marriage it is not void; but valid until annulled, where the former husband or wife has been absent and not known to be living for a specified period,⁵⁷ or where he is generally reputed or so believed by the other to be dead.⁵⁸ Under such statutes it is held that a party seeking their benefits must have acted in good faith,⁵⁹ and the absentee must have absented himself voluntarily.⁶⁰ Such statutes do not not sufficient to establish a prior marriage to annul a marriage properly solemnized within the state. Smith v. Smith, 1 Tex. 621, 46 Am. Dec. 121.

After a decree of absolute divorce either party may remarry unless a statute provides to the contrary. See DIVORCE, 14 Cyc. 729. But the decree must have been valid. McCreery v. Davis, 44 S. C. 195, 22 S. E. 178, 51 Am. St. Rep. 794, 28 L. R. A. 655.

After a decree of limited divorce, where a woman marries, a judgment vinculo matrimonii never having been decreed, she is not entitled to the rights of a wife in a last will and testament. Carmena v. Blaney, 16 La. Ann. 245.

A slave marriage which has become legalized by statute is sufficient to defeat a subsequent common-law marriage (Lee v. Bolden, (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 85 S. W. 1027), but mere cohabitation between slaves, there having been no slave marriage, will not invalidate a subsequent marriage of the slaves (Washington v. McCombs, 32 S. W. 398, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 740). In a state where slave marriages were regarded as valid, a separation by a married couple, without the consent of their master, was not such a dissolution of the marriage as would make such separated parties competent to contract a second marriage. Brown v. Cheatham, 91 Tenn. 97, 17 S. W. 1033.

Bond for license.—A condition in a bond entered into as precedent to the obtaining of a license to marry a minor "that there is no lawful cause to obstruct the marriage," is broken by the existence of a previous valid marriage. Governor v. Rector, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 57.

III. LICENSES AND PUBLICATION OF BANNS.

A. Necessity of License. Unless required by statute the procuring of a license is not a prerequisite to marriage,⁶⁶ but statutes in the various jurisdictions commonly require a license to be obtained.⁶⁷ The general rule, however, in those states in which a license is required is that a marriage celebrated without a license is valid,⁶⁸ unless the statute expressly provides that the marriage shall be

In England marriage licenses were originally issued solely by the pope of Rome, as head of the catholic church, until by the statute of 25 Hen. VIII, c. 21, it was provided that they should be issued by the archbishop of Canterbury under the supremacy of the king. Under the English Marriage Act the issue of special licenses still remained vested in the archbishop of Canterbury, although common licenses were to be issued by surrogates appointed for that purpose. The common license could not license persons to be married in any other place than the parish church where one of the parties belonged, and within certain hours of the day, while a special license issued by the archbishop of Canterbury could license persons to be married at any convenient time or place. Issuance of a license in blank to a person not authorized to determine the rights of persons to be married is illegal. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 142 Ala. 571, 38 So. 640, 110 Am. St. Rep. 53; Brewer v. Kingsberry, 69 Ga. 754.

Penalty.—Where a blank form of marriage license, signed by the register of deeds, is filled up and handed to the person proposing to be married, by the minister solemnizing the marriage, as the register's agent, and at that time the register's term has expired, the paper is invalid because lacking the signature of one de facto register, and hence there can be no penalty for not recording it. Maggett v. Roberts, 112 N. C. 71, 16 S. E. 919. In an action against the register, under a statute providing a penalty for failure to record a license or the return thereof, no allegation as to failure to record the return is required and it is immaterial that the marriages for which the licenses were issued were not celebrated until after the expiration of defendant's term of office. Maggett v. Roberts, 108 N. C. 174, 12 S. E. 890.

A marriage license docket is a public record in the sense that it is open to the public to inspect and copy therefrom, and a citizen may inspect and make memoranda therefrom, and the clerk of the orphans' court is not entitled to a fee for permitting him to do so. Marriage License Docket, 4 Pa. Dist. 162.

76. See Governor v. Rector, 10 Humphr. (Tenn.) 57, holding that where the condition of a bond executed under Act (1778), c. 7, § 3, that there is no lawful cause to obstruct a marriage, is broken by the existence of a previous valid marriage, the wife is the party injured and she alone, and not her father, is entitled to sue thereon.

Jurisdiction of action for false affidavit.—The arches' court of Canterbury has no jurisdiction to entertain a suit by letters of request against a layman for falsely swearing before a surrogate to an affidavit to lead to the issue of a marriage license. Phillimore v. Machon, 1 P. D. 481.

78. People v. Schoonmaker, 119 Mich. 242, 77 N. W. 934, holding that under a statute permitting a probate judge to issue a license and perform the marriage ceremony in certain cases specified, when according to the judgment of the judge the marriage would be a benefit to public morals, and the application for license was accompanied by the written request of the parent or guardian of a party who is a minor, it was necessary to appoint the license nor the marriage solemnized under it is void,⁷⁹ although the officer issuing it may incur a penalty for the act.⁸⁰ In England a marriage by license as distinguished from one by banns⁸¹ is not invalidated by the fact that the license has been issued to one of the parties under a false name.⁸²

C. Liability of Officer For Wrongful Issuance of License. In the absence of statute an officer is not liable in damages to the parent for the marriage of a minor under a license issued without the parent's consent.⁸³ But by statute in several jurisdictions a penalty is imposed on an officer wrongfully issuing a license for the marriage of a minor.⁸⁴ Under some of these statutes the parent a guardian where there was no parent and no guardian of a minor applicant.

E. 819, holding that the legal marriage of a female infant after attaining the age of consent emancipates her from her former parental duties, and if a parent is damaged thereby because deprived of her services, he cannot recover such damages from the register of deeds for unlawfully issuing the marriage license. But compare Barnidge v. Kilpatrick, 111 La. 587, 35 So. 757, holding that where a clerk of the court has never seen the intended wife, and there is nothing in the particular case to arouse his suspicions as to her being a minor, he is not guilty of negligence and is not liable in damages for granting a license in reliance on the truthfulness of statements made to him by the intended husband and a friend accompanying him, who signed as surety a bond required to be given under La. Civ. Code, art. 101, that the parties were of age and that everything was right.

An action will not lie on the officer's bond.—Holland v. Beard, 59 Miss. 161, 42 Am. Rep. 360; Holt v. McLean, 75 N. C. 347; Moretz v. Ray, 75 N. C. 170.

Sanders*, 48 Mo. App. 610.

84. See the statutes of the several states. And see Fulghum v. Roberts, 75 Ala. 341; Roberts v. Pippen, 75 Ala. 103, both holding that the provision in the act of March 1, 1881, repealing Code (1876), § 2681, by which liabilities incurred prior to the passage of the act of March 1, 1881, were left unaffected, was not repealed by the act of Feb. 5, 1883.

Pleading.—A declaration averring that complainant is the parent, and that defendant was the clerk who issued a license to complainant's child, then being a minor, without his consent, is sufficient. Gilbert v. Bone, 64 Ill. 518; Hilboldt v. Caraker, 41 Ill. App. 595. It need not state the sex of the persons named in the license, and that a marriage was solemnized under it, or in the case of a minor that the parents or guardian resided in the state. Ely v. Gammel, 52 Ala. 584. It must be charged that defendant issued the license knowingly or without reasonable inquiry, when his liability depends upon such facts. Maggett v. Roberts, 108 N. C. 174, 12 S. E. 890. An averment that the license was issued without the consent of the parents sufficiently negatives consent. Wood v. Farnell, 50 Ala. 546. It need not be alleged that the other party to the marriage was not of age. Beard v. Holland, 59 Miss. 164. Nor need matters of defense be negatived. Bell v. Wallace, 81 Ala. 422, 1 So. 24; Adams v. Cutright, 53 Ill. 361. A plea setting up a proviso in the statute must bring defendant fully within its terms. Bell v. Wallace, supra.

Amendment.—The complaint may be amended by an alteration of the mere descriptive names of the parties to whom the license was issued. Mitchell v. Davis, 58 Ala. 615.

Aider by verdict.—A complaint in a qui tam action against a probate judge for improperly issuing a marriage license which is defective in failing to allege the residence of a female in the county in which the license issued is cured by verdict and judgment where such defect was not objected to in the court below. Ely v. Gammel, 52 Ala. 584.

Form of complaint.—For form of complaint alleging the issuance of a license to a minor and another under fictitious names see Mitchell v. Davis, 58 Ala. 615.

Burden of proof.—Where the consent of the parent or guardian is a matter of record, plaintiff is not bound to prove the negative averment that such consent was not given. Blann v. Beal, 5 Ala. 357. Nor where any person may sue for the penalty is plaintiff bound to prove that the minor designated in the complaint is his daughter. Roberts v. Pippen, 75 Ala. 103.

may sue for the penalty in his own name,⁸⁵ while under other statutes the suit must be brought in the name of the state.⁸⁶ Plaintiff's motive in prosecuting the suit is immaterial.⁸⁷ Under some of these statutes, it is no defense that the officer issuing the license shall have been misled or deceived as to the fact, by others than the parent or guardian,⁸⁸ nor that he may have been honestly mistaken;⁸⁹ while under other statutes the officer is protected if he requires an affidavit, by the minor or some other credible person claiming to know the fact, that the minor was of the age required by law,⁹⁰ or if he has in good faith examined either of the parties or other witness on oath, and the evidence tends to prove that the person whose age is the subject of inquiry has attained his or her majority, and the officer so decides.⁹¹ Under still other statutes a reasonable inquiry as to the age of the parties is sufficient.⁹² The question of what is a reasonable inquiry, the facts being admitted, is one of law for the court.⁹³ When the officer has delegated his authority he cannot be said to have made reasonable inquiry.⁹⁴ Under a statute providing for a penalty upon the issuance of a license to a minor female, without consent, it is no defense that the person to whom she was licensed to be married was not a minor,⁹⁵ nor is it a defense that the father of the minor, having information of the issuance of the license, made no effort to prevent the marriage.⁹⁶ Nor where the statute requires a written consent is it a defense that the license was delivered to one who promised that it should not be used until such written consent should be obtained.⁹⁷ The statutes, however, are not to be extended by implication to cases not clearly within their scope.⁹⁸ And it has been held a good defense that neither the minor nor her parents resided within the state, no provision being made for the issuance of licenses in such cases.⁹⁹ A judge of probate in issuing a license acts ministerially and not

Evidence.—The record of a subsequent divorce suit between the parties married under the license is inadmissible (Gilbert v. Bone, 79 Ill. 341), as is evidence that the parent had treated the minor harshly (Fitzsimmons v. Buckley, 59 Ala. 539). As bearing on the amount of damages, however, the bad character of the husband may be shown. Larwill v. Kirby, 14 Ohio 1.

Instructions.—In an action for issuing a license without reasonable inquiry, an instruction submitting to the jury the question of whether defendant signed licenses in blank and sent them to his deputy who delivered them was not prejudicial where the facts were not disputed. Cole v. Laws, 104 N. C. 651, 10 S. E. 172.

Indictment.—Under 1 Va. Rev. Code, c. 106, § 16, it was held that an indictment of a clerk of a county court for issuing a license of marriage of an infant never before married, without the consent of the infant's parents or guardian, need not charge that the clerk knew that the party was an infant, that he issued the license maliciously or corruptly, or that a marriage took place in pursuance thereof. *Com. v. judicially;¹ he is responsible for the illegal issuance of a license by a clerk in his office,² as is a county clerk for the act of his deputy.³ A penalty will not be incurred unless a marriage takes place, according to the statute.⁴ A statute providing a penalty excludes a proceeding against the officer by indictment, unless the illegal act is done in bad faith.⁵

D. Notice or Publication of Banns. In some states laws have been or are still in force requiring the publication of banns⁶ as a preliminary to the solemnization of a marriage, but generally with the proviso that this may be omitted if a license is procured.⁷ In others the parties are required to file in the clerk's office a notice of their intention to marry, and that officer delivers them a certificate of such filing, which must be handed to the celebrant;⁸ but the omission of any of these formalities will not avoid the marriage, provided it would be good at common law, unless the statute expressly so declares.⁹ Generally, however, the only statutory prerequisite is the taking out of a license.¹⁰ In England by the act of Geo. II,¹¹ it was provided that all marriages should be void unless solemnized either by license or publication of banns.¹² Under this statute all marriages by banns were absolutely void unless there was a due publication of the banns,¹³ the Place of celebration.—Marriages in chapels not having chapelries or districts annexed to them, and in which banns had not been usually published before the passage of the stat-

provision being strictly construed, it being held that even in the absence of fraudulent intent the names published must be the true and full christian and surname, or at any rate so nearly so as to render recognition easy.¹⁴ By a later statute¹⁵ it was, however, provided that the marriage should be void only where the parties had knowingly and wilfully intermarried without due publication.¹⁶ And under this provision, where the names are misstated, it is necessary that both parties shall have been guilty of a wilful neglect.¹⁷ This statute further provided that after the marriage had been celebrated no question could be raised as to whether the residence of the parties had been truly stated.¹⁸ Under a statute providing for marriage upon due notice given to the registrar,¹⁹ it is not essential that the contents of the notice in respect of christian names, residence, or other details be strictly true or accurate.²⁰

Marriage or maiden name.—Where, after a decree dissolving her marriage, a woman remarries the banns properly describe her by her marriage name, although in the interval between the decree dissolving her first marriage and the celebration of the second she had usually passed by her maiden name, since a name acquired by marriage can be superseded by a reputed name only in a case where the name has been so far acquired by repute as to obliterate the name acquired by marriage. Fendall v. Goldsmid, 2 P. D. 263, 46 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 70. IV. SOLEMNIZATION OR CELEBRATION.

A Persons Who May Solemnize—1. IN GENERAL. Statutes requiring a ceremonial marriage²¹ usually make express provisions as to the persons by whom such marriages may be solemnized.²²

2. CLERGYMEN. By the statutes of the several states it is usually provided that clergymen shall be authorized to solemnize marriages.²³ Under these statutes it is generally provided that the clergymen must be regularly ordained;²⁴ and under some a further requirement is made that he be settled in the work of the ministry.²⁵ his first christian name being omitted, and it was falsely asserted that both parties were twenty-one years of age, the validity of the marriage could not be questioned).

Knowledge by both parties that no due notice has been given is necessary to render a marriage invalid under 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 85, § 42. Reg. v. Rea, L. R. 1 C. C. 365, 41 L. J. M. C. 92, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 484, 20 Wkly. Rep. 632.

Analogy between marriage by notice and by banns.—By the statute of 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 85, the system of marrying before a registrar was first introduced. This statute provided that a previous notice should be given by the persons about to marry to the registrar, and that such notice should be full, giving the names, condition, and residence of the parties, and when given was to be entered in a book accessible to the public and read for three successive weeks at the board of guardians; and a wilful intermarriage without due notice was void. By this statute there was an evident and intended analogy between marriage by notice and by banns. But by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, the system of reading a notice to the board of guardians was done away with, and in place of such a contrivance for the purpose of giving parents a warning of the projected marriages of their minor children, it was provided that the parties giving the notice should swear that he or she had the required consent. This statute removed the analogy between marriages by notice before a registrar and marriages by banns and assimilated them to marriages by license, in which case it was always necessary, in case of minors, to swear that the consent of the parents had been obtained. Holmes v. Simmons, L. R. 1 P. & D. 523, 37 L. J. P. & M. 58, 18 L. T. Rep. N. S. 770, 16 Wkly. Rep. 1024.

Under the law of England before the Reformation there could be no valid marriage without the presence of a priest episcopally ordained, and after the Reformation without the presence of a priest or deacon,²⁶ and he must be a third party to the contract.²⁷ It has, however, been questioned whether the attendance of a clergyman should be required in the case of a marriage in good faith contracted in the colonies or on board ship, where the procuring of a clergyman might be impossible.²⁸ In Canada a marriage celebrated by a priest or minister of a religious denomination other than that to which the parties belong is void;²⁹ and a marriage between catholics must be solemnized by the curé of the parish in which one of the parties is domiciled.³⁰

4. COMPELLING OFFICIAL TO ACT. In England it is held that where a license to marry at a particular church is in the proper form, the incumbent of such church is not only entitled but may be compelled to perform the ceremony.³⁴ The court or a judge thereof has no authority to order one of its officers to celebrate a marriage, unless such officer is properly brought before the court upon a proceeding lawfully instituted in the manner provided by law.³⁵

5. PRESUMPTIONS AND EVIDENCE OF AUTHORITY. In those cases in which it is necessary to prove a marriage in fact, as distinguished from a marriage inferred from circumstances,³⁶ it must be shown that the person who solemnized the marriage was one having authority to do so,³⁷ and such authority cannot be proved by his general reputation.³⁸ A showing that a marriage service was performed by a person acting in a public capacity is, however, prima facie evidence as to his authority.³⁹ By statute in some states the marriage register is sufficient to estab-

6. EFFECT OF WANT OF AUTHORITY. Unless expressly so provided by statute a marriage solemnized by an unauthorized person is not void where the parties assent to the marriage and it is acknowledged and consummated by cohabitation as husband and wife.⁴¹ And under statutes in some states, although the person who performed the ceremony was not authorized to do so, yet if either party believed he was so authorized the marriage will be valid.⁴²

B. Place of Solemnization. By statute in some jurisdictions provision is made for the place in which a marriage shall be solemnized.⁴³ It is not, in the absence of statute making such a provision, necessary that a marriage shall be solemnized in a church or chapel.⁴⁴

C. Form of Ceremony. As a general rule no particular form of words is essential to a ceremonial marriage, provided the words employed are sufficient to evidence a present contract.⁴⁵ A clergyman in British Columbia is not bound to that, although there is no proof of his ordination, the testimony of one that he is a minister of the gospel, and that he performed a marriage ceremony, is admissible, under Mass. Pub. St. c. 145, § 31, making all "circumstantial or presumptive evidence" competent to prove the fact of marriage; Taylor v. State, 52 Miss. 84; In re Megginson, 21 Oreg. 387, 28 Pac. 388, 14 L. R. A. 540; Patterson v. Gaines, 6 How. (U. S.) 550, 12 L. ed. 553. See, however, State v. Bray, 35 N. C. 289, holding that when a marriage is claimed to have been made by a minister, the extent of his authority for that purpose should appear.

Person having two official capacities.—Where the certificate of a person holding the offices of justice of the peace and of judge of the municipal court shows that he performed a marriage, but does not state in which of his official capacities he acted, the presumption is that he acted in that in which the marriage might have been lawfully performed by him. A marriage in Ireland performed by a clergyman of the established church of England is valid, although it was celebrated in the room of a private house and without any special license being granted to the parties, and although it would be invalid in England. Smith v. Maxwell, 1 C. & P. 271, R. & M. 80, 12 E. C. L. 163.

Evidence of registration of chapel pursuant to 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 85.—The fact of solemnization of a marriage in a chapel in the presence of a registrar who could not lawfully have been present had the chapel not been registered and the entry of the marriage in his book raises a prima facie presumption that the chapel was duly registered. Reg. v. Mainwaring, 7 Cox C. C. 192, Dears. & B. 132, 2 Jur. N. S. 1236, 26 L. J. M. C. 10, 5 Wkly. Rep. 119. And the same presumption arises where the ceremony was performed by a clergyman in a place where the church service was performed on several occasions. Reg. v. Cresswell, 1 Q. B. D. 446, 13 Cox C. C. 126, 45 L. J. M. C. 77, 33 L. T. Rep. N. S. 760, 24 Wkly. Rep. 281.

When a marriage has been solemnized in a registrar's office in the presence of the registrar and deputy registrar, the presumption of law is that the requisites of 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 85, § 21, have been complied with. perform the ceremony of marriage, but if he does so the rites and usages of his church or denomination must be followed.⁴⁶

D. Return or Record. By statute it is frequently provided that a person solemnizing a marriage shall make a return thereof to a specified officer of the county in which the marriage takes place;⁴⁷ and a failure to observe such a statute is made an offense punishable criminally.⁴⁸ Other statutes impose a penalty upon the officer to whom the return is made for a failure to record it.⁴⁹ The failure of Formalities in general.—A marriage in Pennsylvania in the presence of a witness by a catholic priest, completed by words in the present tense, without regard to form, is valid. Patterson v. Gaines, 6 How. (U. S.) 550, 12 L. ed. 553.

Jewish marriage.—A marriage between Jews, valid according to the Jewish law, will be regarded as binding. Prince v. Prince, 1 Rich. Eq. (S. C.) 282. And see Frank v. Carson, 15 U. C. C. P. 135, holding that a written contract was not essential to the validity of a Jewish marriage which had been solemnized with all the usual forms and ceremonies of the Jewish service and faith, and that such a marriage was valid, although there existed in relation to it a written contract not produced. See also Goldsmid v. Bromer, 1 Hagg. Cons. 324; Lindo v. Belisario, 1 Hagg. Cons. 216.

Quaker marriages are usually made an exception in the statutes prescribing a formal solemnization. See the statutes of the several states. And see Haughton v. Haughton, 1 Molloy 611.

Presence of witnesses.—St. 4 Geo. IV, c. 76, § 28, which requires that two witnesses shall be present at a marriage and shall sign to the register is merely directory, and a non-compliance with its directions is no ground for annulling a marriage. Wing v. Taylor, 7 Jur. N. S. 737, 30 L. J. P. & M. 258, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 583, 2 Swab. & Tr. 278.

The directions contained in the rubric respecting the opening address to the congregation, the adjuration to the persons about to be married as to confessing any lawful impediment to their union, the putting on the ring, etc., are not absolutely essential to the validity of the marriage, the essential part of the service being the reciprocal taking of each other for wedded wife and wedded husband. Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H. L. Cas. 274, 11 Ir. C. L. 511, 8 Jur. N. S. 770, 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 97, 11 Eng. Reprint 735.

Repetition of words of the service.—The contract of marriage is in its essence a consent on the part of a man and a woman to cohabit with each other, and with each other only. The religious element does not require anything more of the parties; and therefore it is not essential to the validity of a marriage that all the words of the marriage service to be repeated by the man and woman should be actually said; but the ceremonies required by law such as the publications of banns and the like being complied with, when the hands of the parties are joined together and the clergyman pronounces them to be man and wife, if they understand that by that act they have agreed to cohabit together as husband and wife and with no other person, they are married. Harrod v. Harrod, 1 Kay & J. 4, 18 Jur. 853, 2 Wkly. Rep. 612, 69 Eng. Reprint 344.

48. State v. McWhinney, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 364, holding that it is not material to the offense of failing to file a certificate of the solemnization of a marriage by a justice of the peace that a license should have issued.

Indictment or information.—An indictment of a justice of the peace for failing to return a certificate of the solemnization of a marriage need not aver that a license was issued (State v. Wilder, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 582), nor need it allege that a month has elapsed after the time within which the return should have been made (State v. Pierce, 14 Ind. 302; State v. Horsey, 14 Ind. 185). An indictment charging that defendant being a priest of a Roman catholic church, having authority to join others in marriage, did join and marry certain specified persons at a specified place and on a specified day, and "did then and there unlawfully and wilfully, fail, neglect and refuse to transmit to the recorder of the county of Ste. Genevieve the certificate of the marriage" is sufficient under Mo. Rev. St. § 1546. State v. Madden, 81 Mo. 421.

When penalty accrues.—Under a statute requiring a certificate to be filed within three months, and imposing a penalty of five dollars a month for delay after the said three months, no indictment can be sustained until the end of four months' delay. Kent v. State, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 163.

Limitations.—A statute imposing a penalty of five dollars a month for each month's delay in filing a certificate of marriage does not create a distinct offense for each month that the officer fails to file a certificate, and hence a prosecution is barred by the expiration of one year after the expiration of the time given in which to file the certificate. State v. Pool, 2 Ind. 227.

E. Liabilities of Persons Solemnizing — 1. CIVIL LIABILITY. Where a person without sufficient care to ascertain the age of a minor solemnizes his marriage, without the consent of his parent or guardian, it would seem that a civil action for damages will lie in some jurisdictions.⁵¹ By statute in many states a penalty is imposed upon a person who solemnizes the marriage of a minor without the consent of his or her parents or guardian.⁵² So likewise a penalty is in some jurisdictions provided in case any justice of the peace or minister shall join any persons in marriage without a certificate of publication of their intention to be married.⁵³ Early statutes imposed a penalty in case of a marriage where the banns had not been pub-

52. See the statutes of the several states. And see Macklin v. Taylor, Add. (Pa.) 212; Reg. v. Gallant, 10 N. Brunsw. 115.

Right of action.—Under the Pennsylvania statute of 1729, an action could properly be brought in the name of a surviving mother. Buchanan v. Thorn, 1 Pa. St. 431. But such an action cannot be maintained by a parent who has relinquished his parental control over the minor. Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. St. 324; Stansbury v. Bertron, 7 Watts & S. (Pa.) 362. But see Helffenstein v. Thomas, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 209. The act of 1830 was, however, repealed by the Marriage License Act of June 23, 1885, and judgment would not thereafter be rendered in actions, although they were brought before the passage of the said act of 1885. Hilliard v. Roach, 2 Pa. Co. Ct. 174; Hunt v. Rice, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 557.

Defenses.—An honest mistake as to the age of the party (Beckham v. Nacke, 56 Mo. 546); the fact that the parent, by reason of moral degradation, is unfit to take care of his minor child (Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. St. 324); or the fact that there has been a previous seduction (Craft v. Jachetti, 47 N. J. L. 205; Macklin v. Taylor, Add. (Pa.) 212) has been held not to constitute a defense; but the consent of the parent is a good defense, although not evidenced by a certificate when the ceremony was performed (Rodebaugh v. Sanks, 2 Watts (Pa.) 9).

Previous notice.—Under some statutes a previous notice to the justice that it is intended to bring an action against him is made a condition precedent. Mitchell v. Cowgill, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 20. Such notice need not possess the technical formality of a declaration, but it is sufficient if it be explicit enough to indicate the injury complained of (Robinson v. English, 34 Pa. St. 324); and it need not state the kind of writ it is intended to sue on (Mitchell v. Cowgill, supra). A notice cannot be proved by the evidence of plaintiff, nor by evidence of a witness that he heard plaintiff read such notice in the presence of defendant, unless the witness identifies the paper and specifies the day. Minor v. Neal, 1 Pa. St. 403.

Declaration.—Where the action is brought by a person under whose care the minor was; the declaration should allege that the minor had no parent or guardian living. Castner v. Egbert, 12 N. J. L. 259. A mistake in the date is amendable, although the action is in its nature penal. Beates v. Retallick, 23 Pa. St. 288.

Burden of proof.—The burden is on defendant to show the consent of the parent or guardian. Medlock v. Brown, 4 Mo. 379.

Evidence.—Parol declarations of the parent to a third person that he had no objection to the marriage are inadmissible in an action under a statute providing a penalty for marrying a minor without a certificate in writing or without the parent being present and consenting. Wyckoff v. Boggs, 7 N. J. L. 138.

Verdict.—Where in a penal action the jury return a verdict that they find defendant guilty in the manner and form as he stands indicted, the court may properly refuse to receive such a verdict and send the jury out again in order that they may return a verdict in the proper form. Beates v. Retallick, 23 Pa. St. 288.

53. See the statutes of the several states. And see Wood v. Adams, 35 N. H. 32 (holding that the clergyman or magistrate is not required to receive more than a single certificate from a single town clerk, whether the parties reside in the same or different towns, and that he is not responsible for the correctness of the facts set forth in the certificate); Lakeman v. Moore, 32 N. H. 410; Bishop v. Marshall, 5 N. H. 407 (holding that no person except a justice of the peace or a minister of the gospel can incur the penalty, and the declaration must aver that defendant acted in one of such capacities); Campbell v. Shattuck, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 109 (holding that under such a statute a minister or justice of the peace who joins a minor in marriage is liable to the penalty, although the parents of the minor have consented and the minister and register have been notified thereof previous to the solemnization).

lished,⁵⁴ or for the marriage of an apprentice without the consent of his master.⁵⁵ These statutes are purely penal,⁵⁶ and the right to recover will be strictly construed.⁵⁷

2. CRIMINAL LIABILITY. By statute the solemnization of a marriage of a minor, without the consent of his or her parent or guardian, is in some jurisdictions made punishable as a criminal offense,⁵⁸ as is by other statutes the solemnization of marriages between persons who have not obtained a license,⁵⁹ or to whose mar-

54. Helffenstein v. Thomas, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 209, holding that in an action to recover such a penalty plaintiff has the burden of showing the absence of a publication. And see Drake v. McMinn, 27 N. C. 639.

55. Zieber v. Boos, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 321, holding that an action will not lie under such a statute unless the apprentice has been regularly bound by indenture.

56. Beates v. Retallick, 23 Pa. St. 288; Burnell v. Dodge, 33 Vt. 462.

57. Alsop v. Ross, 24 Mo. 283 (holding, under a statute providing a penalty for the marriage of a minor, that an action will not lie against one for confederating with another in marrying a minor, but will lie only against the person who celebrated the marriage); Bollin v. Shiner, 12 Pa. St. 205 (holding that a penalty imposed for the marrying of a minor without the consent of the parent or guardian was not recoverable where the minor was the daughter of a citizen of another state, not resident within the state).

58. See the statutes of the several states.

Where the statute provides that the penalty shall be recovered in an action of debt it is not an indictable offense for a justice of the peace to marry without a license. State v. Loftin, 19 N. C. 31.

Defenses.—The fact that the parties to the marriage informed the officer that they were of age is no defense (Sikes v. State, 30 Ark. 496), nor is the fact that the officer acted upon a verbal message communicated through a third person as coming from the parent, consenting to the marriage (Smyth v. State, 13 Ark. 696).

Limitations.—Where the parties go to another county and are married in the presence of several witnesses, among whom was a kinsman of the female, and after their marriage they retired to their usual place of residence, such is not a secret marriage, nor is the return from the county in which the marriage takes place a secret departure within the saving clause of a statute of limitations. State v. Watts, 32 N. C. 369.

Indictment or information.—For cases in which the sufficiency of an indictment or information for joining in marriage persons under age has been construed see Sikes v. State, 30 Ark. 496 (holding that the existence of a parent or guardian within the state must be alleged, and also that the omission of the word "years" following an allegation of the age of the parties is not fatal); State v. Willis, 9 Ark. 196 (holding it sufficient to allege that the marriage was solemnized without the consent of the parent and that the parent resided within the state, without setting out the name of the parent, and also that it need not be alleged in terms that defendant's license or credentials of clerical character had been previously recorded); State v. Ross, 26 Mo. 260 (holding that the production of a certificate by the minor must be negatived); State v. Winright, 12 Mo. 410 (holding that an indictment following the language of the statute was not sufficient without a specific statement of defendant's acts); U. S. v. McCormick, 26 Fed. Cas. No. 15,663, 1 Cranch C. C. 593 (holding that the indictment must aver that defendant was at the time of solemnizing the marriage a minister authorized and qualified according to the statute to celebrate the rite of matrimony, and also must contain an averment that it was done without the consent of the parents, and aver that there was a parent then living and that there was no guardian who could consent, or that it was without the consent of the guardian as well as without the consent of the parent, and holding further that the addition of the word "clerk" to the name of defendant was not a sufficient averment of his ministerial capacity).

Evidence.—Testimony as to the size, appearance, and general development of the minor is not admissible for the purpose of showing her age, where the matter is susceptible of direct proof. State v. Griffith, 67 Mo. 287. Evidence that the justice omitted all inquiry from the parents of the minor, who were not present, is admissible as tending to show that he had knowledge that the marriage was unlawful. Bonker v. People, 37 Mich. 4.

Instructions.—An instruction must not remove from the jury the power to fix the punishment within the limits established by the statute. Sikes v. State, 30 Ark. 496.

Punishment.—A statute providing that defendant shall be fined in "any sum at the discretion of the jury, who shall pass on the case, or if the conviction be by confession or demurrer, then at the discretion of the court, not less than $25 or more than $500," fixes the limits of the amount of the fine in all cases whether the amount is fixed by a jury or the court. Smyth v. State, 13 Ark. 696.

Harmless error.—The rejection of evidence offered for the purpose of mitigating the punishment is not reversible error where the lowest penalty provided by law has been imposed. State v. Griffith, 67 Mo. 287.

59. See the statutes of the several states. And see White v. State, 4 Iowa 449; People v. McLaughlin, 108 Mich. 516, 66 N. W. 385, holding that it is no defense under such a

riage there is a legal impediment.⁶⁰ In the absence of statute, however, it is not a crime for one not an officer or minister to celebrate a marriage with the consent of the parties to it.⁶¹ But by statute it is sometimes made an offense for a person without authority to solemnize a marriage under pretense of having authority.⁶²

V. INFORMAL AND INVALID MARRIAGES.

A. Operation and Effect—1. IN GENERAL. When a marriage is void ab initio no civil rights can be secured thereby,⁶³ and it may be inquired of in any court where rights are asserted under it,⁶⁴ although the parties are dead.⁶⁵ Where, statute that one of the parties married was under a legal disability.

Jurisdiction.—A complaint charging the party with solemnizing a marriage without a license is not within the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace. White v. State, 4 Iowa 449.

60. Bonker v. People, 37 Mich. 4, holding that the fact that a female is under the age of consent is such a legal impediment.

61. State v. Brown, 119 N. C. 825, 25 S. E. 820.

62. See Barclay v. Com., 116 Ky. 275, 76 S. W. 4, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 463 (holding that under a statute making accessaries before the fact in all felonies liable as principals, an indictment under a statute making it a penitentiary offense for one not authorized to solemnize a marriage under a pretense of having authority, which alleged that one solemnized a marriage between defendant and another and that defendant procured him so to solemnize it, knowing that he did not have authority, is sufficient); Young v. State, 35 Tex. 114 (holding an indictment insufficient which nowhere alleged that defendant was not a minister of the gospel or that he was not legally authorized to solemnize marriages).

63. Ponder v. Graham, 4 Fla. 23; Carpenter v. Smith, 24 Iowa 200; Middleborough v. Rochester, 12 Mass. 363 (holding that the marriage of a woman with one mentally incompetent did not change her lawful settlement); Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49. Compare George v. Stevens, 31 Tex. 670.

Legitimacy of children see BASTARDS, 5 Cyc. 625, 626.

Statutes legitimizing children see BASTARDS, 5 Cyc. 632.

Plural marriages.—Although a husband is under a moral obligation to support his plural wives and their children, he is under no legal obligation to do so. Riddle v. Riddle, 26 Utah 268, 72 Pac. 1081.

Quasi-partnership.—Where a woman lives with a man not legally her husband, but believes him to be such, their relation will be treated as a partnership as to property acquired by their joint efforts during such relation, and to which each contributed something, thus entitling each to an equal share therein, regardless of the amounts respectively contributed. Lawson v. Lawson, 30 Tex. Civ. App. 43, 69 S. W. 246. But see contra, Schmitt v. Schneider, 109 Ga. 628, 35 S. E. 145, holding that a woman who co-habits with a man, renders to him household services, and delivers to him her earnings, under the belief that the contract of cohabitation between them is the equivalent of a lawful marriage, cannot upon ascertaining that such is not the fact maintain against him an equitable petition to compel a division of the property acquired with the proceeds of the earnings of both.

New Hampshire.—Farmington v. Somersworth, 44 N. H. 589, holding that either party to a controversy involving the settlement of a pauper may impeach the marriage of any ancestor from whom the settlement is alleged to have been derived.

North Carolina.—Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49. But compare In re Hybart, 119 N. C. 359, 25 S. E. 963, holding that where the wife is not a party to proceedings to have a receiver appointed for an insane husband's estate, the validity of the marriage contract cannot be attacked by ex parte affidavits.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Marriage," § 93.

But compare Martin v. Ryan, 2 Pinn. (Wis.) 24, holding that the validity of a marriage cannot be questioned by the husband in an action against him and his wife on a debt contracted by the wife before the marriage.

65. Ponder v. Graham, 4 Fla. 23; Bell v. Bennett, 73 Ga. 784 (holding that the question of whether a man was of unsound mind, and so incapable of contracting a marriage, may be raised twelve years afterward in a proceeding by the woman, after his death, to obtain the year's support given by statute); Fornshill v. Murray, 1 Bland (Md.) 479, 18 Am. Dec. 344 (holding that, although no proceedings can be had to have a marriage declared void after the death of one of the parties, yet, where the title to property depends upon the question of legitimacy, the question of the validity of a marriage may be inquired of incidentally, either at law or in equity); Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49.

When the issue is immaterial the question will not be determined. So, where by statute however, the marriage is voidable merely it is valid for civil purposes until its nullity has been pronounced by a competent court,⁶⁶ which may be done only during the lifetime of the parties,⁶⁷ the marriage being good ab initio after the death of either of the parties for all purposes.⁶⁸ By statute, however, it may be provided that even a void marriage shall not be questioned on the trial of collateral issues.⁶⁹ Under the codifications of the civil law it is provided that where a void marriage has been contracted in good faith the party or parties who have acted in good faith, and their issue, are entitled to civil rights.⁷⁰

2. MENTAL INCAPACITY. It has been held that where a marriage contract is void by reason of the mental incapacity of one of the parties thereto, a decree of divorce or annulment is not necessary to restore the parties to their original rights.⁷¹

the status of the offspring would not be changed were the marriage declared valid, the validity of the marriage of plaintiff's father and mother cannot be inquired into in an action by a son on the bond of his father's administrator to recover his distributive share of the personal estate in the hands of the administrator. *State v. 69. See Goshen v. Richmond, 4 Allen (Mass.) 458, holding that St. (1845) c. 222, providing that the validity of a marriage shall not be so questioned on account of the insanity or idiocy of either party, applies to marriages existing at the time of its passage. And see Charles v. Charles, 41 Minn. 201, 42 N. W. 935, holding that under Gen. St. (1878) c. 62, § 1, providing that, where a person whose husband or wife has been absent for five successive years without being known to such person to be living during that time marries during the lifetime of such husband or wife, the marriage is valid to the time of a decree annulling it, made by a court with jurisdiction in such matters, in an action for the purpose, and having the proper parties before it, the validity of such marriage cannot be assailed collaterally.

70. See Smith v. Smith, 43 La. Ann. 1140,

Ann. 519 (holding that while by statute a null marriage may have such effect, the contract has in other respects no vitality). And see Matter of Hall, 61 N. Y. App. Div. 266, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 406 (in which the operation of the civil code of France is considered); Cathcart v. Union Bldg. Soc., 15 L. C. Rep. 467.

Civil effects as employed in such a statute is sufficiently broad to mean all civil effects given to a marriage by law. Smith v. Smith, 43 La. Ann. 1140, 10 So. 248, holding that the right of a surviving wife to a marital portion, conferred by La. Rev. Civ. Code, art. 2382, was included.

Lockwood*, 42 Vt. 720 (holding that, although a marriage of a lunatic, duly solemnized and followed by cohabitation, may be set aside by means of a proper suit, it is not void if no proceedings are taken, and on his death the wife becomes entitled to the rights of a widow); Ex p. Turing, 1 Ves. & B. 140, 35 Eng. Reprint 55 (holding a sentence of the ecclesiastical court necessary, although the marriage was void, as in the case of lunacy).

Annulment by act of parties in general see infra, VIII, A. 1.

Collateral attack.—Where a husband was mentally incapable of contracting marriage, it is absolutely void ab initio, and may be impeached collaterally without judgment of nullity. Winslow v. Troy, 97 Me. 130, 53 Atl. 1008. Contra, see Williamson v. Williams, 56 N. C. 446, holding that a court of equity will not entertain the question of "nullity of marriage on account of imbecility," collaterally raised, but will stay proceedings in the suit in which the issue is made, that it may be determined by a direct sentence, in either a superior court of law or a court of equity.

A marriage by private contract with a lunatic is not such as is referred to in 2 N. Y.

However, a decree establishing the nullity of the marriage in such a case is proper.⁷²

3. CONSANGUINITY OR AFFINITY. A marriage which is voidable merely upon the ground of consanguinity must be attacked during the life of the parties,⁷³ and such a provision is in some jurisdictions expressly made by statute,⁷⁴ some statutes being limited in their operation to a case in which the marriage was followed by cohabitation and birth of issue.⁷⁵ Such a statute applies to marriages contracted before its enactment.⁷⁶ By the civil law, although a marriage may be null, it will produce civil effects where contracted in good faith, although such good faith may lack legal foundation.⁷⁷

4. PREVIOUS EXISTING MARRIAGE. A marriage contracted during the existence of a prior valid and undissolved marriage, being void,⁷⁸ no decree is necessary to avoid it,⁷⁹ although by statute the existence of a previous undissolved marriage is made a ground for divorce,⁸⁰ or a proceeding to declare the nullity of the marriage authorized.⁸¹ It interposes no obstacle to a subsequent marriage after the dissolution of the original marriage,⁸² nor does it confer any rights upon the parties.⁸³ Under the Spanish law, however, a husband or wife entering in good faith into a marriage with one who has another consort living is, in law, not only innocent of crime but has all the rights, incidents, and privileges of lawful marriage, until the former marriage becomes known to such innocent party.⁸⁴ And in Louisiana such a marriage, when contracted in good faith, produces civil effects as to the parties and their children.⁸⁵

B. Ratification — 1. IN GENERAL. A marriage which is void by statute ab initio cannot be made valid by a subsequent ratification by the parties,⁸⁶ such as by a continued cohabitation as husband and wife,⁸⁷ although it has been held that where the cause rendering the marriage void has been removed, continued cohabitation may prevent the parties from asserting, at least as between themselves, that the marital relation does not exist.⁸⁸ A marriage which is merely voidable, however, may be ratified and made valid by the subsequent assent of the parties;⁸⁹ for example, where it has been accomplished by fraud⁹⁰ or by duress;⁹¹ but in order that a marriage obtained through duress may be validated it is necessary that the ratification be after the duress has ceased to be operative.⁹²

2. NONAGE. A marriage between persons incapacitated by nonage is rendered irrevocable by cohabitation after the incapacity is removed;⁹³ but prior cohabitation does not have such effect.⁹⁴

3. MENTAL INCAPACITY. A marriage of a lunatic may be validated by ratification or consummation in a lucid interval,⁹⁵ and similarly a marriage contracted by a person when intoxicated may be affirmed when he has become sober.⁹⁶

4. PHYSICAL INCAPACITY. A marriage voidable by reason of physical incapacity may be ratified by the acts of the party in recognizing the relation and in not seeking an annulment.⁹⁷

5. PREVIOUS EXISTING MARRIAGE. Since a marriage contracted while a prior existing marriage is in force is void it is incapable of ratification,⁹⁸ although the parties may when the disability is removed contract a valid common-law marriage.⁹⁹ In some cases, however, upon the theory that the relations of the parties are originally meretricious and will be presumed to continue so, it is held that there must, after the removal of the impediment, be a new agreement between the parties to become husband and wife in order that a valid common-law marriage may be established; and a mere continuance of the former cohabitation and repute is not sufficient,¹ although by the weight of authority it seems that continued cohabitation in the same manner as before is sufficient to establish, at least as in favor of the innocent party, a valid common-law marriage.² Where by statute common-law marriages have been abolished, continued cohabitation and recognition of the marital relations will not of course validate a marriage void in its inception.³ In some jurisdictions it has been provided by statute that where one of the parties to the void marriage has acted in good faith, in the belief that the former husband or wife was dead, or without knowledge of the former marriage, the parties shall be deemed legally married from the time of the removal of the impediment to the marriage by death or divorce.⁴

C. Estoppel to Assert or Deny Marriage. It would seem that where a marriage is void ab initio neither of the parties may by their acts become, as against the other, estopped to deny its existence,⁵ although it has been held that holding that where a woman lived with her impotent husband for twenty years, and then, without suing for annulment of the marriage, separated herself from him and accepted a competent support for ten years longer and until he discovered her in adultery and brought suit for divorce, such conduct on her part constituted an affirmation of the voidable marriage. where one of the parties by false representations as to the non-existence of a legal impediment has induced the other to enter into the marriage he will, where the other has continued to act on such representations after the impediment has been removed, be estopped to deny their truth.⁶ The parties may, however, with regard to third persons become estopped to deny⁷ or assert⁸ a marital relation as in the case of other matters in pais.⁹ A third person may by recognition of a the validity of the second marriage by the fact that she lived with her second husband after a divorce from her first husband was granted. But compare Mason v. Mason, 101 Ind. 25, holding that where a divorced wife remarried within two years after divorce, in violation of N. Y. Rev. St. (1881) § 1030, her second husband, who lived with her for two years after the expiration of the inhibited period, is estopped to deny the validity of their marriage, in a subsequent suit by the wife to obtain a divorce from him; Everett v. Morrison, 69 Hun (N. Y.) 146, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 377 (where a woman silently withholds her assent to a formal marriage, but subsequently treats it as valid, she is estopped to assert that it is not binding); Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 626 (where persons have represented themselves to be married, or have assumed the relation of husband and wife, cohabiting and holding themselves out to the public as such, although not in fact married, they will not be permitted to deny the marriage as between themselves when either is seeking to defeat rights acquired by the other, either directly or indirectly, on the faith of the marriage).

Estoppel of infant.—A youth who, by falsely and fraudulently representing himself to be nineteen years old, induced defendant to marry him, is not estopped by his fraud, in an action by him to annul the marriage, to show that he was under legal age, under Rev. St. §§ 2329, 2350, 2351, 2353, providing that a male party to a marriage, under eighteen years of age, may, on the ground that he was under legal age, have the marriage annulled. Eliot v. Eliot, 81 Wis. 295, 51 N. W. 81, 15 L. R. A. 259.

6. Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 68 N. J. Eq. 414, 59 Atl. 813, holding that where complainant and defendant were formally married, and entered into matrimonial relations in the belief that the complainant's then husband was dead, but, in order to place the legality of their relations beyond question, complainant procured a divorce from her lawful husband, who was in fact alive, but in parts unknown, after which defendant, in the presence of witnesses, assured complainant that she was his legal wife, and that no further ceremony was necessary, and thereby induced complainant, in reliance upon such representations, to remain with him, cohabiting with him as his wife, for over twenty years, defendant was estopped to deny that he had intended to enter into marriage relations with complainant.

7. Ponder v. Graham, 4 Fla. 23; Divoll v. Leadbetter, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 220; Gathings v. Williams, 27 N. C. 487, 44 Am. Dec. 49. And see Applegate v. Applegate, 45 N. J. Eq.

116, 17 Atl. 293, where a man and woman declared themselves to be married and were recognized as husband and wife by their friends and relatives, and cohabited for years, and a child was born to them after which the woman left the man, and was formally married to a third person, and it was held that she was estopped to claim support as the wife of the latter. But compare Carpenter v. Smith, 24 Iowa 200, holding that the fact that a woman, believing herself lawfully married, joined her supposed husband with her as co-plaintiff in an action for assault upon her, and recovered judgment, will not estop her from denying his rights in the judgment, where she subsequently, on discovering that he had a lawful wife living at the time of the marriage, obtains a divorce from him on that ground.

Description in a deed.—The fact that defendant is described in a deed of settlement under which she claims as the wife of B will not estop her from denying such fact where the deed was made by one trustee to another, both of whom were strangers to her, for her benefit, and was not signed by her. Brown v. Beckett, 6 D. C. 253.

8. Alabama, etc., R. Co. v. Beardsley, 79 Miss. 417, 30 So. 660, 89 Am. St. Rep. 660 (holding that where the declaration in an action for wrongful death showed that one plaintiff was the wife of the decedent and the other his daughter by a prior marriage, there was not such estoppel against the wife to assert the validity of the marriage as dispensed with the necessity that defendant prove that there was no divorce, in order to show that the second marriage was not legal); Richardson's Estate, 6 Pa. Co. Ct. 653 (where a woman, claiming to be the wife of A, did not assert herself as such for nearly thirty years, and acquiesced in his subsequent marriage with another woman, and herself married B; and it was held that she was estopped to claim, after the death of A, that she was his wife).

Estoppel by void marriage.—Where a woman who was married under the sealing ceremony of the mormon church obtained a "church divorce," and, believing such divorce to be valid, went through a marriage ceremony with another man, and lived with him as his wife, she was not thereby estopped, on learning that her divorce was invalid, from asserting her first marriage, and denying the legality of the second marriage. Hilton v. Roylance, 25 Utah 129, 69 Pac. 660, 58 L. R. A. 723.

marriage estop himself from denying it as against other third persons.¹⁰ Estoppel may also arise from a judgment in which the fact of a marriage is necessarily involved or to which it is incident.¹¹ The fact that a man by his will recognizes a person as his wife will not estop his executor from asserting the invalidity of the marriage as against the wife, where she attempts to secure dower in opposition to the terms of the will.¹²

D. Curative Legislation — 1. IN GENERAL. Provision has been made in some states by statute for the legalization of the relationship of persons cohabiting as husband and wife at the time of the passage of such statutes,¹³ or for the validation of informal marriages previously contracted.¹⁴ These statutes will not be construed to operate retrospectively for the creation of disabilities unless the intent is clearly apparent.¹⁵ A void marriage is not rendered valid by the mere fact that a prohibiting statute was repealed shortly after the marriage was contracted.¹⁶ A statute legitimizing the issue of a void marriage does not affect the relationship of the parties to such marriage.¹⁷

2. SLAVE MARRIAGES. Since, during the existence of slavery, slaves with the consent of their owners frequently, either by a formal ceremony of marriage or by a simple agreement to live with each other as husband and wife and to be recognized by each as such, entered into what are termed "moral marriages," upon the abolition of slavery statutes were generally passed in the former slaveholding

The mere acceptance of a conveyance, in which a woman is described as the wife of the person named, does not estop the grantee from assailing the marriage. Cram v. Burnham, 5 Me. 213, 17 Am. Dec. 218; Spicer v. Spicer, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 112.

11. Doe v. Roe, 2 Houst. (Del.) 49, holding that where lands of a decedent are ordered sold for the payment of his debts, subject to his widow's right of dower therein, the purchaser at such sale is estopped to deny the validity of the marriage between the widow and decedent.

13. See the statutes of the several states. And see Floyd v. Calvert, 53 Miss. 37, in which it was held that Const. art. 12, § 22, affirming the marriage relation between persons then cohabiting as husband and wife, did not operate to establish marriage between persons then cohabiting illicitly, and that in order to assert a relation under such constitutional provision, where it appears that the persons were previously cohabiting unlawfully, there must be shown some formal and explicit agreement between the parties that they will and do accept the new organic law as establishing thenceforward between them a new relationship, or there must be such open and visible change in the conduct and declarations of the parties that an agreement to accept the new law may fairly be inferred.

rated before the statute takes effect.²⁵ To bring the parties within their provisions there must have been an agreement to live as husband and wife, a mere relation of concubinage not being sufficient.²⁶ The agreement to enter into the relation of husband and wife need not have been express, but as in other cases it may be implied from conduct and declarations.²⁷ While under some statutes the parties are required to make a formal declaration of intent to live as husband and wife,²⁸ such provisions have been often held merely directory and continued cohabitation is sufficient.²⁹ The effect of such statutes is, as between the parties, to legalize the customary marriage and not to institute a new marriage.³⁰ The relation when legalized is not affected by the fact that the parties separate and contract other marriages.³¹ A statute recognizing the voluntary dissolution of "moral marriages" between slaves does not apply to a ceremonial marriage between freed men and women.³²

E. Criminal Responsibility. Persons who assume to contract a marriage in a manner forbidden by statute may be punished under a statute rendering living together as man and wife without being married an offense.³³

As to third persons acquiring rights in the interim between the emancipation and compliance with the statute, however, the marriage does not relate back. Stewart v. Munchandler, 2 Bush (Ky.) 278.

A common-law marriage, however, although the indirect result of a slave marriage, is a new contract and not a ratification of the slave marriage, the parties having separated years before emancipation and each having had a subsequent slave marriage to another, and not entered into their common-law marriage until years after emancipation, although living in the same county. *Gilbert v. who asserts it.³ So if a second marriage is attacked on the ground of a prior existing marriage between one of the spouses and a third person, the burden of proving the prior marriage rests on the party asserting it.⁴ If, however, the prior marriage is shown to have existed at the time of the second marriage, the burden of proving a remarriage to the second spouse after the dissolution of the first marriage by death or divorce rests on the party asserting the validity of the second marriage.⁵ The burden of proving that a ceremonial marriage was de futuro rather than per verba de presenti rests also on the party asserting it.⁶

b. Cohabitation and Reputation as Creating Presumption of Marriage⁷ —

(i) IN GENERAL. In some states all marriages are declared by statute to be void which are not attended with certain formalities,⁸ to be evidenced by record or other writing, and the mode of proving a marriage is accordingly limited to documentary evidence.⁹ In the absence of such legislation a marriage may be proved by circumstantial evidence; and since the presumption is in favor of marriage and against concubinage, the fact that a man and woman have openly cohabited as husband and wife for a considerable length of time, holding each other out and recognizing and treating each other as such by declarations, admissions, or conduct, and are accordingly generally reputed to be such among their relatives and acquaintances, and those who come in contact with them, may give rise to a presumption that they had previously entered into an actual marriage, although there be no documentary evidence thereof or direct testimony to that effect;¹⁰

Exceptions to rule.—A marriage cannot be proved by cohabitation and reputation in an action by the next of kin of a deceased supposed wife to recover her personality of her supposed husband (Kuhl v. Knauer, 7 B. Mon. (Ky.) 130), or in an action for criminal conversation (see HUSBAND AND WIFE, 21 Cyc. 1630), or, it seems, in proceedings for the removal of a husband and wife as paupers (Poultney v. Fair Haven, Brayt. (Vt.) 185). Nor can a marriage be thus proved in prosecutions for adultery (see ADULTERY, 1 Cyc. 963. See, however, State v. Wilson, 22 Iowa 364), bigamy (see BIGAMY, 5 Cyc. 702), incest (see INCEST, 22 Cyc. 59), or living in adultery (see LEWDNESS, 25 Cyc. 216). No exception exists in an action for alienating a wife's affections or enticing her away (Scherpf v. Szadeczyk, 4 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 110. And see HUSBAND AND WIFE, 21 Cyc. 1624), or in an action for divorce (Summerville v. Summerville, 31 Wash. 411, 72 Pac. 84. And see DIVORCE, 14 Cyc. 691).

Negro marriages may be presumed from marital cohabitation and reputation. Scoggins v. State, 32 Ark. 205; Green v. Norment, 5 Mackey (D. C.) 80; Stover v. Boswell, 3 Dana (Ky.) 232; *Long v. tion by the parties, and a holding out of each other as husband and wife respectively. The parties must recognize and treat each other as husband and wife, and so conduct themselves as to create a reputation of being such. They must hold each other out to the public as husband and wife; and if an occasion arises when lawful spouses would naturally admit or declare the existence of a marriage, they must do likewise; and hence if on such an occasion they deny that a marriage exists or admit its non-existence, it tends to defeat the presumption.¹⁴ And (3) to Rhode Island.—Williams v. Herrick, 21 R. I. 401, 43 Atl. 1036, 79 Am. St. Rep. 809, holding that in order to constitute evidence from which a marriage may be inferred, the origin of the cohabitation must have been consistent with a matrimonial intent, and the cohabitation must have been of such a character, and the conduct of the parties such, as to lead to the belief in the community that a marriage existed, and thereby to create the reputation of a marriage.

Virginia.—Eldred v. Eldred, 97 Va. 606, 34 S. E. 477, holding that where the cohabitation is not shown to have been matrimonial and justified by contemporaneous behavior sufficient to give the reputation of marriage, it is not sufficient.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Marriage," §§ 61, 62. And see cases cited supra, note 10, and infra, this note.

An irregular, limited, or partial cohabitation is not sufficient; it must be continuing and complete, and such as is usual between persons lawfully married. McKenna v. McKenna, 180 Ill. 577, 54 N. E. 641 [affirming 73 Ill. App. 64] (where the man lodged and boarded apart from the woman); Imboden v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 111 Mo. App. 220, 86 S. W. 263 (where the cohabitation was only occasional); Haley v. Goodheart, 58 N. J. Eq. 368, 44 Atl. 193 (where the man regularly lodged and boarded apart from the woman); Matter of Brush, 25 N. Y. App. Div. 610, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 803 (where the woman lived apart in a house of ill fame, and the man had a home elsewhere); In re Yardley, 75 Pa. St. 207 (where the cohabitation was irregular); Green's Estate, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 605 (where the man's regular home was with his parents); Bickings' Appeal, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 202 (where the man merely lodged in the woman's boarding-house); In re Smith, 3 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 122 (where the cohabitation was only periodical); Eldred v. Eldred, 97 Va. 606, 34 S. E. 477 (where the cohabitation was partial and irregular).

Secret cohabitation is not sufficient; it must be open to the observation of those who come in contact with the parties. Quackenbush v. Sworthbiger, 136 Cal. 149, 68 Pac. 590; McKenna v. McKenna, 180 Ill. 577, 54 N. E. 641 [affirming 73 Ill. App. 64]; Hemmway v. Miller, 87 Minn. 123, 91 N. W. 428; In re Terry, 58 Minn. 268, 59 N. W. 1013; Haley v. Goodheart, 58 N. J. 193; Cunningham v. Burdell, 4 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 343; Hill v. Burger, 3 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 432; Turpin v. Public Administrator, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 424.

The duration of the cohabitation should be taken into consideration. Moore v. Heineke, 119 Ala. 627, 24 So. 374; Odd Fellows' Ben. Assoc. v. Carpenter, 17 R. I. 720, 24 Atl. 578. If a marriage agreement is proved lapse of time is unimportant. In the absence of proof of an agreement the cohabitation must have continued for a long period of time, unless there has been an express acknowledgment of marriage, in which case a short cohabitation is sufficient. Hill v. Hibbit, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 183, 19 Wkly. Rep. 250. A short cohabitation may be sufficient where it terminated by the man's compulsory absence on military duty and his subsequent death while absent. Dream's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 559. And see Wilkinson v. Payne, 4 T. R. 468. Separation of parties as rebutting presumption see infra, VI, B, 1, f, (I), (B). Subsequent ceremonial marriage as rebutting presumption of prior marriage by cohabitation and reputation see infra, VI, B, 1, f, (I), (B).

Cohabitation in a state where common-law marriages are not recognized may be considered in connection with cohabitation in the state of the forum, where such marriages are valid, in determining the question of marriage. Moore v. Heineke, 119 Ala. 627, 24 So. 374; In re Dysart Peerage, 6 App. Cas. 489. But see Norcross v. Norcross, 155 Mass. 425, 29 N. E. 506.

Illicit origin of cohabitation as defeating presumption of marriage see infra, VI, B, 1, f, (I), (B).

E. 1071 (where it appeared that the woman was colored and the man white; that she had never claimed to be his wife, went by her own name, acquired property by that name, associated with colored people while he associated with white, was introduced to his associates as his housekeeper, took an obligation from him for money loaned by her, payable at his death to her by her name, and void in case he should survive her, and that she filed her claim against his estate in her own name).

New Jersey.—Haley v. Goodheart, 58 N. J. Eq. 368, 44 Atl. 193, where it appeared that the only places at which the man introduced the woman as his wife were in saloons and at questionable balls; that she knew that his father was wealthy, and, although meagerly supported, was apparently content; that during the time he traveled for his health they had no correspondence; that he never inquired about her during his absence, and for a few years before he died he had had no communication with her; that on his death-bed he made no allusion to her; and that after his death she made no claim as his wife.

New York.—Matter of Brush, 25 N. Y. App. Div. 610, 49 N. Y. Stump*, 53 Pa. St. 132, 91 Am. Dec. 198 (where, after the man's death, the woman had an act passed by the legislature legitimatizing their sons, who were described therein as "illegitimate"); Bott's Estate, 10 Pa. Dist. 122 (where the woman admitted that she was not married); Green's Estate, 5 Pa. Co. England.—Robertson v. Crawford, 3 Beav. 102, 43 Eng. Ch. 102, 49 Eng. S. 431 (where the woman registered a child of the alleged marriage in her maiden name).

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Marriage," §§ 61, 62.

Acquiescence in subsequent ceremonial marriage of alleged spouse.—If a woman acquiesces for a long period of time in a ceremonial marriage entered into by the man with another after the cohabitation had terminated, it defeats the presumption of marriage which otherwise might arise from the cohabitation. Matter of Stanley, 1 N. Y. St. 325. And see In re Dysart Peerage, 6 App. Cas. 489. Subsequent ceremonial marriage as rebutting presumption of marriage see infra, VI, B, 1, f, (1), (B).

Conclusiveness of admissions and declarations.—The presumption of marriage arising from evidence that a man and a woman lived together as husband and wife, and acknowledged and treated each other as such, and were so regarded and treated by their relations, will not be overturned by proof that the parties made declarations denying the existence of the marriage, unless they were made under circumstances of peculiar seriousness and solemnity. Henderson v. Cargill, 31 Miss. 367. And admissions and declarations of marriage, in connection with cohabitation, are not necessarily conclusive of the fact of marriage. Laurence v. Laurence, 164 Ill. 367, 45 N. E. 1071; Van Dusan v. Van Dusan, 97 Mich. 70, 56 N. W. 234; Heminway v. Miller, 87 Minn. 123, 91 N. W. 428 (holding that a marriage will not be presumed from occasional admissions and secret cohabitation); Fagan v. Fagan, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 592, 11 N. Y. Suppl. 748; Turpin v. Public Administrator, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 424; Reading F. Ins., etc., Co.'s Appeal, 113 Pa. St. 204, 6 Atl. 60, 57 Am. Rep. 448; Odd Fellows' Ben. Assoc. v. Carpenter, 17 R. Declarations subsequent to cohabitation.—Declarations repugnant to the existence of a marriage, if made after the cohabitation had terminated, have been held to be insufficient to defeat the presumption of marriage. Moore v. Heineke, 119 Ala. 627, 24 So. 374; Matter of Taylor, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 611; Janey's Estate, 2 Pa. Dist. 145, 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 550. So subsequent declarations of marriage are not conclusive in favor of its existence. Eldred v. Eldred, 97 Va. 606, 34 S. E. 477. See, however, cases cited supra, this note.

The woman must be recognized as wife in the place where the parties reside.—Recognition in another place where the parties are sojourning is not sufficient. Com. v. Omohundro, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 298.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Marriage," §§ 61, 62.

Duration of reputation.—The evidence of neighbors and mere acquaintances of habit and repute must extend through a long series of years to raise the presumption of a marriage agreement; but if the consensus is once proved lapse of time is unimportant; and where there is evidence of express acknowledgment, a very short cohabitation in accordance therewith will be sufficient for this purpose. Hill v. Hibbit, 25 L. T. Rep. N. S. 183, 19 Wkly. Rep. 250. Duration of cohabitation see supra, note 13.

Family reputation.—The fact that a man is not reputed to be married among the members of his family does not necessarily defeat the presumption of marriage. Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 263. And see Collins v. Bishop, 48 L. J. Ch. 31.

Place of reputation.—The reputation which is material on the question of marriage is that which exists in the place where the parties cohabit. Davis v. Orme, 36 Ala. 540; Jones v. Hunter, 2 La. Ann. 254 (holding that the testimony of one person that he knew another as a married woman for a few months before her death in a neighborhood into which she had lately removed, a stranger from another state, is not sufficient to prove her marriage); Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 263 (holding that evidence that among the man's friends and relatives, who resided in another place and did not know of his relations with the woman, he was reputed to be unmarried, is mere hearsay); Comly's Estate, 6 Pa. Dist. 119, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 184; Com. v. Omohundro, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 298 (reputation in a place where the parties were sojourning being held insufficient).

Reputation must be uniform and general, not divided or singular.—In order to establish a marriage, the reputation thereof must be uniform and general; divided or singular reputation is not sufficient. Quackenbush v. Swortfiger, 136 Cal. 149, 68 Pac. 590; Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Colo. App. 303, 50 Pac. 1049; Powers v. Charbmury, 35 La. Ann. 630; In re Yardley, 75 Pa. St. 207; In re Smith, 3 Lack. Leg. N. (Pa.) 122; Williams v. Herrick, 21 R. I. 401, 43 Atl. 1036, 79 Am. St. Rep. 809 (holding that the fact that a ceremonial marriage after a cohabitation of nineteen years was deemed necessary by a friend, who advised it, is evidence that there was no general and uniform reputation in the community that the parties were married); Eldred v. Eldred, 97 Va. 606, 34 S. E. 477; Arnold v. Chesebrough, 58 Fed. 833, 7 C. C. A. 503 [affirming 46 Fed. 700]; Henderson v. Weis, 25 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 69. And see Cross v. Cross, 55 Mich. 280, 21 N. W. 309. However, a witness cannot testify that parties alleged to be married had a divided reputation on the subject. Jackson v. Jackson, 82 Md. 17, 33 Atl. 317, 34 L. R. A. 773. And reputation may be proved by the testimony of any person having knowledge thereof.¹⁶

(ii) ESTOPPEL TO ASSERT PRESUMPTION.¹⁷ Where a marriage is set up as having been performed at a particular time or place or by a particular form or ceremony, and the evidence fails to support the assertion, the party asserting the marriage will not be allowed to rely on cohabitation and reputation to establish it.¹⁸ And the fact that a third person delays asserting rights under an alleged marriage for a long period of time and until after both parties have died is adverse to the presumption of marriage arising from their cohabitation.¹⁹

2. AS TO VALIDITY OF MARRIAGE GENERALLY²⁰—a. In General. If a marriage in fact is established by evidence or admission, it is presumed to be regular and valid, and the burden of adducing evidence to the contrary rests on the party who attacks it.²¹ the fact that the testimony of the different witnesses as to reputation is conflicting does not necessarily show that there was no general and uniform reputation, since this fact, like any other, may be proved by a preponderance of evidence. Klenke v. Noonan, 118 Ky. 436, 81 S. W. 241, 26 Ky. L. Rep. 305; Lyle v. Ellwood, L. R. 19 Eq. 98, 44 L. J. Ch. 164, 23 Wkly. Rep. 157. And see Davis v. Pryor, 3 Indian Terr. 396, 58 S. W. 660. Contra, Ashford v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 80 Mo. App. 638. Thus the opinion of a few immediate neighbors who make up the social circle will outweigh the negative testimony of a thousand citizens who know nothing and care nothing about the matter. Comly's Estate, 6 Pa. Dist. 119, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 184. And see Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 263.

Subsequent reputation.—In order to show marriage the reputation must be contemporaneous with the cohabitation and not subsequent to its termination. Eldred v. Eldred, 97 Va. 606, 34 S. E. 477. And reputation of singleness, in order to disprove marriage, should likewise be contemporaneous with the cohabitation. Matter of Taylor, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 611. So evidence of a woman's reputation, after she left her husband, for chastity during the time she lived with him, is not competent to disprove marriage. Jackson v. Jackson, 82 Md. 17, 33 Atl. 317, 34 L. R. A. 773.

The fact of reputation of marriage may be outweighed by the declarations of the parties that they had never been married. Philbrick v. Spangler, 15 La. Ann. 46.

General reputation against marriage.—It has been held that evidence of general reputation and belief against marriage in the neighborhood is not admissible for the purpose of disproving the existence of a marriage. Henderson v. Cargill, 31 Miss. 367; Bartlett v. Musliner, 28 Hun (N. Y.) 235. Contra, Boone v. Purnell, 28 Md. 607, 92 Am. Dec. 713. And compare Jackson v. Jackson, 82 Md. 17, 33 Atl. 317, 34 L. R. A. 773; Matter of Taylor, 9 Paige (N. Y.) 611.

Individual opinion that certain parties were married is not admissible to prove the marriage. Jackson v. Jackson, 80 Md. 176, 30 Atl. 752.

To prove the general reputation that a woman is married, addresses of letters written her are admissible in evidence. Cuneo v. De Cuneo, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 436, 59 S. W. 284.

Secret cohabitation see supra, note 13.

16. Boone v. Purnell, 28 Md. 607, 92 Am. Dec. 713; Knower v. Wesson, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 143, holding that the evidence need not come from the members or connections of the families of the parties whose marriage is in question.

General reputation cannot be proved by testimony of the parties, however. It should be proved by neighbors and acquaintances. Com. v. Stump, 53 Pa. St. 132, 91 Am. Dec. 198.

b. Foreign Marriage.²² There is no presumption that the marriage laws of another state or country are different from the laws obtaining in the forum.²³ Accordingly, if a foreign marriage is valid under the laws of the forum, a party attacking it as contrary to the lex loci contractus bears the burden of proving the foreign law on which he relies;²⁴ and if the marriage is invalid under the laws of the forum, the burden of proving that the lex loci contractus is such as to give it validity is on the party asserting it.²⁵ In determining what law governs a common-law marriage, the court will presume, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that it was contracted in the state wherein the acts occurred which are relied on as establishing the marriage.²⁶

3. AS TO PRÆEXISTENCE OR CONTINUANCE OF RELATION SHOWN ONCE TO EXIST²⁷—

a. Marital Relation. The fact that a marriage exists at a certain time raises no presumption of its prior existence;²⁸ but if the marriage relation is shown once to exist it will be presumed to continue in the absence of evidence of its dissolution by death or divorce.²⁹

b. Meretricious Relation.³⁰ If intercourse between persons of opposite sex was illicit in its inception because of their failure to enter into a marriage by ceremony or by agreement, it is presumed to continue so, and the burden of proving a subsequent intermarriage rests on the party asserting it.³¹

It has been held, however, that the production in the courts of Texas of a certified copy from the office of a county recorder in the state of Missouri of a certificate, under the sign manual of a justice of the peace, that he had solemnized a former marriage according to law, cannot be admitted as competent evidence to establish the former marriage to the exclusion of a marriage contracted in Texas, without due proof of the laws of Missouri relating to the subject-matter. *Smith v. 4. AS TO DISSOLUTION OF PRIOR MARRIAGE OF ALLEGED SPOUSE BY DEATH OR DIVORCE.³² It has been seen in another connection that if a marriage has actually taken place, the presumption is in favor of its validity.³³ In the case of conflicting marriages of the same spouse, this presumption operates in favor of the second marriage.³⁴ Accordingly the burden of showing the validity of the first marriage is on the party asserting it,³⁵ and even where this is established it may be presumed in favor of the second marriage that at the time thereof the first marriage had been dissolved³⁶ either by a decree of divorce³⁷ or by the death of the former

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Marriage," § 66.

If a marriage is invalid because one of the parties has a prior spouse, the burden of proving a new marriage after death or divorce of the prior spouse rests on the party asserting it. See supra, VI, A, 1, a.

Where a man twice married was accused of bigamy and acquitted, there is no presumption of the nullity of the second marriage. Burn v. Fontaine, 4 Rev. Lég. 163.

If a man is thrice married, and the validity of the third marriage is in issue, the presumption is in favor of the third rather than the second marriage. Palmer v. Palmer, 162 N. Y. 130, 56 N. E. 501 [affirming 50 N. Y. Suppl. 1131], holding that where a man left his wife, contracted a second marriage more than five years later, subsequently obtained a divorce from his first wife, and then married a third time, the presumption is that at the time of the second marriage he knew that the first wife was living, and accordingly the second marriage was illegal.

Effect of conditional divorce from prior spouse.—On an application to revoke letters of administration, granted to respondent as widow of deceased, because she was not his widow, the introduction by petitioners of a decree of divorce from a former husband prohibiting her remarriage in the state is prima facie sufficient to put respondent on proof of a marriage between decedent and herself without the state. W. 790 (holding that where a person after his second marriage lived in the town where the first wife lived, and the latter never questioned the validity of the second marriage or the legitimacy of the issue thereof, the presumption is that the parties to the first marriage were divorced before the second marriage); In re Edwards, 58 Iowa 431, 10 N. W. 793 (holding that where a woman married during the life of another man to whom she had at one time been married, and by reason of the destruction of records it cannot be shown that she had ever been divorced, the presumption of innocence will be sufficient, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, to establish the divorce); Blanchard v. Lambert, 43 Iowa 228, 22 Am. Rep. 245 (holding that where a husband and wife separate, and the former lives and cohabits for years with a woman whom he claims and who is reputed to be his wife, the law presumes a divorce from the first wife, and the latter may legally marry again). See, however, Goodwin v. Goodwin, 113 Iowa 319, 85 N. W. 31 (holding that where a man was married to two women, spouse,⁸⁸ so as to cast the burden of adducing evidence to the contrary on the

the presumption of the validity of the second marriage, in the absence of other evidence of a divorce, would not overcome the presumption of the continuance of the first marriage in a case involving property rights); Gilman v. Sheets, 78 Iowa 499, 43 N. W. 299 (holding that a divorce will not be presumed where there is no evidence of conduct inconsistent with the continuance of the marriage relation on the part of a wife, although the husband has deserted her and married again); Ellis v. Ellis, 58 Iowa 720, 13 N. W. 65 (holding that the facts that husband and wife had lived apart for years and that he had contracted a subsequent marriage does not create a presumption that he had procured a divorce, in the face of testimony of the wife that she did not know that her husband had married again or was cohabiting with another woman, and where there is nothing to show that she did not regard the marriage as an existing fact).

Kentucky.—Scott v. Scott, 77 S. W. 1122, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1356 (where a man went to another state for the purpose of getting a divorce, and on his return contracted a second marriage, and on the second wife's death contracted a third marriage, and the first wife apparently recognized the later marriages); Howton v. Gilpin, 69 S. W. 766, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 630 (holding that where a conveyance executed by persons claiming to be husband and wife and who have been regularly married has been acquiesced in for almost forty years by those who have any interest in the matter, and the only person making the question has no direct interest in it, the deed will not be declared void because there is no evidence that the wife had been divorced from a former husband who was living when the deed was made and who did not join in it).

Length of absence.—Save in Louisiana, party attacking the second marriage.³⁹ It has been held, however, that the presumption of divorce or death of a prior spouse will not be indulged in favor of an alleged second marriage the proof of which rests merely on cohabitation and repute.⁴⁰

B. Mode and Sufficiency of Proof⁴¹ — 1. AS TO FACT OF MARRIAGE GENERALLY — a. In General. Save in actions for criminal conversation⁴² and in prosecutions for certain crimes,⁴³ the fact of marriage may be proved either by direct evidence or by circumstantial or presumptive evidence, and either by documentary evidence or by parol,⁴⁴ and the sufficiency of the evidence to establish a marriage is where ten years' absence is required (McCaffrey v. Benson, 38 La. Ann. 198), if a person absents himself for seven years, and in that time nothing is heard of him by those who would naturally receive tidings were he alive, he is presumed to be dead (see DEATH, 13 Cyc. 297 et seq.). This rule applies to married persons. See cases cited supra, this note. And in the absence of statute to the contrary (Harrison v. Lincoln, 48 Me. 205), a spouse who has been absent for less than seven years may be presumed to be dead, so as to give effect to a second marriage of the deserted spouse (see cases cited supra, this note. Contra, McCaffrey v. Benson, supra).

If one spouse deserts the other and marries again, the death of the deserted spouse will not ordinarily be presumed in favor of the second marriage. Williams v. Williams, 63 Wis. 58, 23 N. W. 110, 53 Am. Rep. 253. And see In re Richards, 133 Cal. 524, 65 Pac. 1034; Machini v. Zanoni, 5 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 492.

If a deserted spouse leaves the state and marries again in less than seven years, the death of the prior spouse at the time of the second marriage will not be presumed. Hyde Park v. Canton, 130 Mass. 505; Thomas v. Thomas, 19 Nebr. 81, 27 N. W. 84.

Presumptions as to life and death in general see DEATH, 13 Cyc. 295 et seq.

39. See cases cited supra, notes 36-38.

However, the burden of proving death as distinguished from the burden of adducing evidence thereof (see EVIDENCE, 16 Cyc. 923 et seq.) rests on the party who alleges it in his pleadings as part of his case. McCaffrey v. Benson, 38 La. Ann. 198; Thomas v. Thomas, 19 Nebr. 81, 27 N. W. 84.

Nossaman, 4 Ind. 648 (holding that where a cohabitation was known by the parties to be adulterous in its origin, no presumption of the death or divorce of the prior spouse will be indulged); Jones v. Jones, 45 Md. 144 (where the court refused to presume a divorce); Machini v. Zanoni, 5 Redf. Surr. (N. Y.) 492 (where the court refused to presume death). See, however, Jackson v. Claw, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 346 (where death was presumed); Canadian, etc., Mortg., etc., Co. v. Bloomer, 14 Wash. 491, 45 Pac. 34 (where a divorce was presumed).

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Marriage," §§ 70, 79.

This rule applies to foreign marriages. White v. Holsten, 4 Mart. (La.) 471.

governed by the general rules of evidence.⁴⁵ Among the facts to be considered as evidence of marriage, on the one hand, are the facts that the parties cohabited as husband and wife and were reputed to be such;⁴⁶ that the man introduced the woman as his wife;⁴⁷ that she assumed his name;⁴⁸ and that they were recognized as husband and wife by their relatives.⁴⁹ As tending to disprove a marriage, on the other hand, the court or jury should take into consideration the facts that the proper records or memoranda are silent as to the marriage;⁵⁰ that the woman did not assume the man's name;⁵¹ that the parties never cohabited as man and wife;⁵²

Record evidence is not necessary. Martin v. Martin, 22 Ala. 86 (holding that a license with the minister's return thereon is not indispensable to prove a marriage); Pierce v. Jacobs, 7 Mackey (D. license⁶⁴ or marriage certificate⁶⁵ or certified copies thereof, and also by private the parties whose names are thereon entered, that he was duly authorized to perform the marriage ceremony, and that he was required to keep a record thereof); State v. Miller, 43 S. C. 306, 21 S. E. 254 (holding that a copy of the record of one state, where the law pertaining to the registry of marriage licenses applies only to residents of that state, of a marriage claimed to have been solemnized therein of parties residing in another state is not conclusive evidence of the marriage, so as to preclude proof that the ceremony was performed while defendant was under duress); In re Athlone, 8 Cl. & F. 262, 8 Eng. Reprint 102 (holding that the book kept at the British ambassador's hotel in Paris, in which the ambassador's chaplain makes and subscribes entries of all marriages of British subjects celebrated by him, has not the authenticity of a British parish register, and that an attested copy of an entry in it is not admissible to prove a marriage); Leader v. Barry, 1 Esp. 353 (holding that a copy of a foreign marriage is not evidence to prove a marriage); McCarthy v. Hart, 8 L. C. Admissions and declarations held insufficient to establish a marriage see Carpenter v. Smith, 24 Iowa 200 (holding that the joinder by a woman of a man whom she believes her lawful husband as co-plaintiff in an action for assault upon her, and the judgment recovered in the action, do not raise a presumption conclusive upon her that her marriage with the man was valid as to grounds peculiarly within his knowledge rendering it invalid); McConnell v. New Orleans, 15 La. Ann. 410; Matter of Rawson, 29 Misc. (N. Y.) 534, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 1078; Bates v. Bates, 7 Misc. (N. Y.) 547, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 872 (holding that a paper signed by a man, to the effect "that Annette F. McGrath is my true and beloved wife," is not sufficient to prove a marriage, where the facts tend to show that it was given as a sham to enable the woman to conceal illicit intercourse); Turpin v. Public Administrator, 2 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 424; Van Ness v. Van Ness, 28 Fed. Cas. No. 16,869, 1 Hayw. & H. 251 (holding that the admissions and acknowledgments of the parties to a pretended marriage alleged to have taken place in Pennsylvania but not solemnized as required by the statutes of that state are not sufficient to establish a valid marriage between the parties when made only in the presence of each other and not in the presence of a third person); Wilson v. Mitchell, 3 Campb. 393 (holding that to support a defense to an action that plaintiff was under coverture when the cause of action accrued, although she lived as a single woman, it is not enough to prove a bare declaration by her that she had been married to a man who is still alive, without actual proof of the marriage or of cohabitation with her supposed husband, particularly if there appears to be any reason to doubt that the marriage was valid).

Declarations held to be inadmissible see Smith v. Smith, 52 N. J. L. 207, 19 Atl. 255; Van Tuyl v. Van Tuyl, 57 Barb. (N. Y.) 235, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 5; In re Sussex Peerage, 11 Cl. & F. 85, 8 Jur. 793, 8 Eng. Reprint 1034.

Weight of admissions and declarations.—The value of a party's declarations to prove his marriage depends on the circumstances under which they were made. Eldred v. Eldred, 97 Va. 606, 34 S. E. 477. Admissions as to the fact of one's own marriage are entitled to more weight than denials. Greenawalt v. McEnelley, 85 Pa. St. 352. And see Drinkhouse's Estate, 151 Pa. St. 294, 24 Atl. 1083. See, however, Henry v. McNealey, 24 Colo. 456, 50 Pac. 37; McConnell v. New Orleans, 15 La. Ann. 410; Com. v. Omohundro, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 298 (holding that verbal assertions of the alleged husband during his lifetime will not establish a marriage in favor of a claimant under his will, if the will repels all presumption of marriage).

may be considered as tending to disprove a marriage.⁷⁴ The declaration of a person since deceased that he had celebrated a marriage between certain persons,⁷⁵ or that he had witnessed a marriage ceremony,⁷⁶ is not competent proof of the marriage. Declarations of third persons that no marriage existed are not as a rule competent evidence against the parties to an alleged marriage;⁷⁷ but declarations of members of the families of the parties to an alleged marriage are competent evidence on an issue of pedigree.⁷⁸

f. Cohabitation and Reputation⁷⁹—(1) AS ESTABLISHING MARRIAGE—(A) In General. Independent of any presumption of law,⁸⁰ and independent of any direct or documentary evidence,⁸¹ a marriage may be circumstantially established by the fact that a man and woman have for a considerable period of time openly cohabited as husband and wife and recognized and treated each other as such, so that they are generally reputed to be married among those who have come in contact with them. Such circumstances justify a finding that at the commencement of the cohabitation the parties actually entered into a marriage.⁸²

See however In re James, 124 Cal. 653, 57 Pac. 578, 1008, holding that declarations of a decedent, made a few weeks before his death, that he was a widower, are inadmissible in opposition to a claim that he was married at that time.

A. 384 (holding that on an issue whether deceased executed a marriage contract with petitioner, conveyances executed by him subsequent to the contract, in which he is described as a single man, are not admissible against petitioner); Smith v. Smith, 52 N. J. L. 207, 19 Atl. 255; Hill v. Hill, 32 Pa. St. 511 (holding that a reputed husband's declarations in denial of his marriage cannot be admitted to disprove it); Moore's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. It has been held, however, that where the rights of third persons are affected and the legitimacy of children is called in question, cohabitation and reputation may be conclusive evidence of marriage. Guardians of Poor v. Nathans, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 149.

Measure of proof required to rebut presumption.—It has been variously held that the presumption of marriage arising from cohabitation and reputation can be rebutted only by overwhelming proof (Jackson v. Rhem, 59 N. C. 141), clear proof (In re Shephard, [1904] 1 Ch. 456, 73 L. J. Ch. 401, 90 L. T. Rep. N. S. 249), and strong and weighty evidence (Fox v. Bearblock, 17 Ch. D. 429, 45 J. P. 648, 50 L. J. Ch. 489, 44 L. T. Rep. N. S. 508, 29 Wkly. Rep. 661); that the presumption must be rebutted by positive testimony (Guardians of Poor v. Nathans, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 149; Doe v. Breakey, 2 U. C. Q. B. 349), and that negative testimony of persons who never witnessed the intercourse is not sufficient (Guardians of Poor v. Nathan, su- pra); and finally that every reasonable possibility of an actual marriage must be disproved (Ferrie v. Public Administrator, 4 Bradf. Surr. (N. Y.) 28).

Weight of testimony of parties in denial of marriage.—The presumption may be sufficiently rebutted by the testimony of the parties in denial of the marriage (Benavais v. Barba, 32 La. Ann. 1264; Christy v. Clarke, 45 Barb. (N. Y.) 529; In re Bott, 10 Pa. Dist. 122), although they are interested in negating the fact of marriage (Preston v. Lyons, 24 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 142. Contra, Stevens v. Stevens, 56 N. J. Eq. 488, 38 Atl. 460). Admissions and declarations of parties against marriage see supra, note 72.

However, proof that there was no formal ceremonial marriage does not necessarily rebut the presumption; non constat that the parties did not enter into a marriage by contract. *Mullaney v. marriage arising from cohabitation and reputation is effectually rebutted by proof that at its commencement the parties, either by ceremony or by contract, in fact entered into a marriage which was void either because one or both of them had a prior spouse living and undivorced or because it was otherwise repugnant to law,⁸⁸ or by proof that one of the parties was at the commencement of the cohabitation the lawful spouse of another⁸⁹ or that he or she had previously cohabited with another in such a manner as to give rise to a presumption of marriage.⁹⁰ And if, during the cohabitation with one woman, the man cohabits also with another woman, no presumption of a marriage with either arises.⁹¹ And the presumption may be rebutted by proof that the parties to the cohabitation finally separated without just cause,⁹² and that one or both afterward entered into a marriage with another⁹³

E. 641], holding that if the entire transaction is established by direct evidence, and it appears therefrom that the parties entered into a contract of marriage, the court cannot presume from any subsequent conduct of the parties that any other or different contract was entered into. And see Lewis v. Ames, 44 Tex. 319; In re Sheran, 4 Terr. L. Rep. (Can.) 83. See, however, Caujolle v. Ferrié, 23 N. Y. 90 [affirming 26 Barb. 177] (holding that the presumption is not overcome by the fact that the man had declared and caused to be recorded his purpose to solemnize the marriage by the public acts prescribed by the law of his domicile, and that such purpose was not shown to have been consummated, but that there was an entry on the record of such declaration importing that nothing came of it); Johnson v. Johnson, 1 Coldw. (Tenn.) 626; Wilkinson v. Payne, 4 T. R. 468.

Reason of rule.—The entire transaction between the parties being thus shown by direct evidence, and there being no direct evidence of a subsequent marriage, the cohabitation is presumed to have been continued by virtue of the void marriage, and the burden of proving a subsequent marriage is on the party who asserts it. or afterward cohabited with another as a spouse.⁹⁴ However, the presumption of marriage arising from cohabitation and reputation is not necessarily rebutted by the fact that the same parties subsequently enter into a ceremonial marriage;⁹⁵ nor by the fact that the parties are of different social rank;⁹⁶ nor by the fact that the proper records disclose no evidence of marriage.⁹⁷

(ii) *AS CORROBORATING DIRECT EVIDENCE OF MARRIAGE.*⁹⁸ The fact of cohabitation and repute is frequently proved, not as in itself establishing a marriage, but in connection with direct or record evidence that a marriage was entered into at a particular time or place; and in this event it may afford strong corroboration of such evidence, and a marriage be thus established.⁹⁹

2. AS TO FACT OF MARRIAGE OF PERSONS PREVIOUSLY SUSTAINING ILLICIT RELATIONS.¹

It has been seen that the presumption is that an intercourse illicit in its origin because of the failure of the parties to enter into a marriage either by ceremony or by agreement continues to be illicit.² This presumption is, however, rebuttable, and a subsequent internarrriage of the parties may be shown either by direct evidence or by evidence of circumstances from which a subsequent marriage may be inferred.³ Accordingly, while the mere fact that the parties continued to cohabit does not give rise to a presumption of marriage,⁴ yet if it appears that the later cohabitation took on a matrimonial character, and that the parties held themselves out as man and wife, and treated each other as such and were generally reputed to be married, the presumption of the continuance of the original illicit relation is rebutted, and a subsequent marriage may be inferred.⁵

App. 94], holding that, although the relation between the parties was in its inception meretricious, a marriage is sufficiently proven by the woman's testimony that they made a contract of marriage, the fact that they immediately moved from disreputable into respectable quarters and continued to live as man and wife, he introducing and representing her as such, and, on the birth of their child, sending her congratulations, and testimony that he told another that he made such a contract.

Iowa.—Johnson v. Clancy, 105 Iowa 242, 74 N. W. 760.

Maryland.—Jones v. Jones, 45 Md. 144, holding that marriage may be inferred, notwithstanding the connection between the parties was illicit in its inception, from the facts that after the birth of a bastard child the parents cohabited together and treated each other as man and wife, and treated the child as their own, the mother assuming the father's name, and were treated as and reputed to be man and wife by their acquaintances.

New York.—Gall v. Gall, 114 N. Y. 109, 21 N. E. 106 [affirming 12 N. Y. St. 604]; Hynes v. McDermott, 91 N. Y. 451, 43 Am. Rep. 677; Caujolle v. Ferrié, 23 N. Y. 90 [affirming 26 Barb. 177], holding that the facts that the man desired to marry the woman, and that, although he might have maintained the meretricious intercourse without opposition from his family, he abandoned his home and parents to live with her, are some evidence that he did contract a marriage.

It has been seen also that if the relation between two parties is illicit in its origin because of a prior subsisting marriage between either of them and a third person, the burden of proving an intermarriage of the parties after dissolution of the prior marriage by death or divorce of the prior spouse rests on whomsoever asserts that the parties are husband and wife.⁶ This burden may be discharged and the subsequent marriage be shown by either direct or circumstantial evidence.⁷ The authorities are not in accord, however, as to whether the fact that after the death or divorce of the prior spouse the parties continued to cohabit as husband and wife is sufficient to justify an inference that they entered into a new marriage after the removal of the impediment.⁸ In case an actual marriage is Under the rule that a connection confessedly illicit in its origin will be presumed to retain that character until some change is established, it is not necessary in order to establish such change to show the precise time or occasion thereof; but it is sufficient if the facts show that a change must have occurred, transforming the illicit intercourse into matrimonial cohabitation (White v. White, 82 Cal. 427, 23 Pac. 276, 7 L. R. A. 799; Badger v. Badger, 88 N. Y. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 263; Caujolle v. Ferrié, 23 N. Y. 90 [affirming 28 Barb. 177]; and the presumption may be repelled, although the circumstances fail to show how the change from concubinage to matrimony took place (Caujolle v. Ferrié, supra).

Evidence of subsequent marriage agreement.—A marriage agreement entered into after the removal of the impediment may be sufficiently evidenced by any clear and unambiguous language or conduct. Michigan University v. McGuckin, 62 Nebr. 489, 87 N. W. 180, 57 L. R. A. 917, 64 Nebr. 300, 89 N. W. 778. However, the fact that after the man obtained a divorce from his prior spouse the other woman declared a desire that they might live together as husband and wife is not sufficient to show an express marriage contract which will legalize the relation. Wertzel v. Central Lodge, No. 19, A. O. U. W., 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 269.

Measure of proof of subsequent marriage.—

It has been held that when circumstantial evidence is relied on, the circumstances must be such as to exclude the inference that the former relation continued, and satisfactorily prove that it was changed into that of actual marriage by mutual consent. Foster v. Hawley, 8 Hun (N. Y.) 68; Williams v. Williams, 46 Wis. 464, 1 N. W. 98, 32 Am. Rep.

722. In other cases, however, it has been held that where a connection is unlawful in its inception because of some illegal impediment to marriage, slight circumstances may be availed of to show that its character was thereafter changed to a lawful union (State v. Worthingham, 23 Minn. 528; Adger v. Ackerman, 115 Fed. 124, 52 C. C. A. 568), and that evidence of the time or place of the change is not indispensable to its proof (Adger v. Ackerman, supra).

4. AS TO CONTINUANCE OF PRIOR MARRIAGE OF ALLEGED SPOUSE.¹⁴ It has been seen that where a person has been twice married, it may be presumed in favor of the second marriage that at the time thereof the first marriage had been dissolved by divorce or by death of the former spouse.¹⁵ This presumption, however, is not conclusive; the party against whom it operates may rebut it by any competent evidence tending to show that at the time of the second marriage the first marriage was subsisting.¹⁶ The presumption may nevertheless be reinforced by Evidence held sufficient to rebut presumption of dissolution see People v. Willard, 92 Cal. 482, 29 Pac. 585 (where the refusal of a woman twice married to disclose the name of her former husband, and her failure to show a dissolution of the marriage in any manner, were held sufficient to discredit her statement that she was single at the date of the second marriage, and sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that her second marriage was unlawful); Wilson v. Allen, 108 Ga. 275, 33 S. E. 975 (where the evidence produced by a woman twice married to show a divorce from the former husband consisted of records of the court showing only one verdict for divorce, and an entry afterward made on the docket that the divorce case was dismissed); Cole v. Cole, 153 Ill. 585, 33 N. E. 703 (holding that where it is proved that a man and a woman were legally married; that she has in no way violated her marriage obligations; that he deserted her without cause; that the marriage was never dissolved in the jurisdiction in which they lived together and in which she continued to live; and that she has no personal knowledge of his obtaining a divorce, the presumption is that a second marriage contracted by him during her life is invalid); Schmisser v. Beatrice, 147 Ill. 210, 35 N. E. 525 (where a man filed a bill for divorce, and on the same day he was married to another woman and suffered the bill to be dismissed, and the records of the county in which both he and his first wife had resided show no other suit for divorce); Thomas v. Thomas, 19 Nebr. 81, 27 N. W. 84; Rex v. Harborne, 2 A. & E. 540, 1 Harr. & W. 36, 4 L. J. M. C. 49, 4 N. & M. 341, 9 E. C. L. 255 (where a man's first wife was alive in a distant colony twenty-six days before the second marriage, and it was held that the jury were justified in finding the second marriage to be void).

Evidence held insufficient to rebut presumption of dissolution see Gerlach v. Turner, 89 Cal. 446, 26 Pac. 870 (hearsay evidence of invalidity of divorce); Pittinger v. Pittinger, 28 Colo. 308, 64 Pac. 195, 89 Am. St. Rep. 193 (evidence that a woman married deceased in Colorado six years after his separation from his first wife in Pennsylvania, with whom he had lived but three years, and whom he left, believing her guilty of conduct which would entitle him to a divorce, and that the first wife never obtained a divorce, but married again, and the testimony of the first wife that deceased never obtained a divorce from her, and that no papers for that purpose were ever served on her); Potter v. Clapp, 203 Ill. 592, 68 N. E. 81, 96 Am. St. Rep. 322; Coal Run Coal Co. v. Jones, 127 Ill. 379, 8 N. E. 865, 20 N. E. 89 [affirming 19 Ill. App. 365] (holding that the presumption is not overcome by the fact that a man's first wife was living at the time of his second marriage and had not obtained a divorce, since a divorce may have been obtained by him); Boulden v. McIntire, 119 Ind. 574, 21 N. E. 445, 12 Am. St. Rep. 453 (holding that the record of a divorce obtained by the woman's first husband in Ohio subsequent to proof of such facts as will establish a dissolution of the prior marriage;¹⁷ and on an issue as to the validity of a marriage, hearsay evidence that the husband had previously been married to another woman is offset by hearsay evidence that he was subsequently divorced from her.¹⁸

5. AS TO VALIDITY OF MARRIAGE GENERALLY.¹⁹ It has been seen that the validity of a marriage which has in fact been contracted may be established by presumptive evidence; that is to say, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, an actual marriage is presumed to be regular and valid.²⁰ This presumption is not conclusive; it may be rebutted by evidence of facts invalidating the marriage.²¹ To overcome the presumption, however, the evidence of the invalidating facts must be strong, distinct, satisfactory, and conclusive;²² and if there is any evidence to the death of her second husband is not conclusive evidence that she had not previously obtained a divorce in Indiana); Tuttle v. Raish, 116 Iowa 331, 90 N. W. 66 (where the evidence was held insufficient to preclude a finding against divorce); Scott v. Scott, 77 S. W. 1122, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1356 (holding that the presumption of the legality of the last marriage was not overthrown by the mere denial of the first wife, wholly unsupported, that the husband was divorced from her); Le Brun v. Le Brun, 55 Md. 496; Nixon v. Wichita Land, etc., Co., 84 Tex. 408, 19 S. W. 560 (where both husband and wife contracted second marriages, and the validity of the husband's second marriage was in issue, and it was held that the mere fact that one of the children of the first marriage testified that she never heard of any divorce, and that another witness swore that the first wife believed her first husband to be dead when she married her second husband, would not overcome the presumption of divorce).

Degree of evidence.—Although the burden of proving the contention that a divorce had not been obtained before the second marriage is on the party attacking it, yet he is not required to make plenary proof of that contention. It is enough that he introduces such evidence as, in the absence of all counter testimony, will afford reasonable ground for presuming that the contention is true. Schmisser v. Beatrice, 147 Ill. 210, 35 N. E. 525.

Cote*, 20 Quebec Super. Ct. 338 (holding that in the case of persons who had previously professed the Roman catholic religion going before a protestant minister for the purpose of being married, any presumption in favor of their continuing to profess their previous religion would yield to the stronger presumption in favor of the validity of the marriage).

The presumption is less strong where there is no issue and where the parties to the marriage admit its invalidity. In re McLoughlin, L. R. 1 Ir. 421.

Evidence held sufficient to rebut presumption of validity see Locklayer v. Locklayer, 139 Ala. 354, 35 So. 1008 (where the evidence was held to support a finding that the reputed husband of a white woman was a negro, so that their marriage was void); Gall v. Gall, 114 N. Evidence held insufficient to rebut presumption of validity see Aldrich v. Steen, (Nebr. 1904) 98 N. W. 445, 100 N. W. 311 (where the evidence was held not to show such a total want of understanding as to avoid a marriage for insanity, in the absence of fraud or undue influence); Davis v. Davis, 7 Daly (N. E. 919 (holding that the mere fact that a marriage is solemnized two days after the date of expiration of the register's term of office is not of itself sufficient evidence to go to the jury to rebut the presumption that the license was issued during the register's term of office); Hilton v. Roylance, 25 Utah 129, 69 Pac. 660, 95 Am. St. Rep.

support a finding in favor of the marriage it will be sustained.²³ While the presumption in question is rebuttable, yet the evidence may be such as conclusively to establish the validity of the marriage.²⁴

VII. TRIAL.²⁵

A. Questions For Court and For Jury. The existence in fact of a marriage,²⁶ and the existence of the facts essential to a valid marriage,²⁷ and of other facts relating thereto,²⁸ are to be determined by the jury (if it be a jury case), where the evidence is conflicting;²⁹ and it rests with the trier of the facts whether or not the testimony of a witness is to be believed.³⁰ It is likewise within the province of the jury in such case to say whether a marriage is to be inferred from marital cohabitation and reputation;³¹ whether the presumption arising from marital cohabitation and reputation is rebutted;³² whether a cohabitation illicit in its origin continued so or whether the parties subsequently entered into a marriage;³³

821, 58 L. R. A. 723 (where the evidence relating to a ceremony of sealing performed between a man and woman, members of the mormon church, was held to show such belief and good faith on the part of the contracting parties as would make a valid common-law marriage).

Consent to marriage.—Assuming the marriage to be regular, previous and subsequent conduct of the parties is admissible evidence upon the question of consent. Macneill v. Macgregor, 2 Bligh N. S. 393, 4 Eng. Reprint 1178. Thus assumption of the rights and duties of the marital relation is evidence of present consent to marriage, which is supported by a previous contract of the parties for present marriage. In re Ruffino, 116 Cal. 304, 48 Pac. 127. And see Hamilton v. Hamilton, 9 Cl. & F. 327, 8 Eng. Reprint 440. In deciding upon the sufficiency of the assent, the court ought to confine its attention almost exclusively to what took place at the ceremony; and that the man's consent was the result of duress will not be concluded from the fact that at the time he was in the custody of the constable under proceedings instituted against him as the father of a bastard child. Jackson v. Winne, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 47, 22 Am. Dec. 563. Evidence held not to rebut presumption of consent see Cooper v. Crane, [1891] P. 369, 30 Wkly. Rep. 127.

B. Instructions. Instructions to a jury as to marriage are, generally speaking, governed by the ordinary rules of law relating to instructions.³⁵

VIII. ANNULMENT AND DISSOLUTION.³⁶

A. In General—1. BY ACT OF PARTIES. Marriage differs from other civil contracts in that it creates a legal status, and hence is not dissoluble at the will of the parties by their mutual consent or their renunciation or denial of it;³⁷ nor by abandonment however long continued;³⁸ nor by decree of a church judicatory;³⁹ nor, with a few statutory exceptions, in any other way than by the sovereign power of the state speaking through its tribunals.⁴⁰ And this rule applies to com-

Instructions as to cohabitation and repute.—A charge, in an action to determine the fact of a marriage, that it was incumbent on plaintiff to prove "facts, from which a valid marriage may be presumed," but which fails to state what facts are required for that purpose, is erroneous; and where there was other evidence than that of reputation to establish a marriage, it was error to charge that, under the evidence set forth in the instruction, marriage by reputation was not established. Jackson v. Jackson, 80 Md. 176, 30 Atl. 752. On the issue of a common-law marriage, where there is no evidence of such cohabitation as raises a presumption of marriage but merely of occasional instances of cohabitation, instructions on cohabitation and repute are improper. Imboden v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 111 Mo. App. 220, 86 S. W. 263.

Instructions as to mental capacity.—On a question as to the mental capacity of a man to contract marriage, it was not error for the court to state to the jury, merely by way of illustrating the test of competency, that a man would be considered incompetent if he had not mental capacity enough to be able to provide a support for a family when he was possessed of means sufficient for that purpose, such instruction not being open to the criticism that the husband must necessarily succeed in earning a livelihood. St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 593. And the court may properly direct the jury to inquire as to mental condition at the very time of the marriage, where it also charges that evidence of his condition both before and after the ceremony should be considered in determining his condition at the time of the marriage. Non- nemacher v. Nonnemacher, 159 Pa. St. 634, 28 Atl. 439.

Wait*, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 192, 202 et seq. In some states many common-law grounds of annulment are declared by statute to be grounds of divorce, and accordingly cases in which they have been put forward as grounds of divorce are treated in the article dealing with that subject. See DIVORCE, 14 Cyc. 595 et seq.

P. 498, holding that one lawfully married to a man becomes his legal widow on his death, although they live apart in different countries for twenty-five years, during which time the husband enters into another marriage.

39. Delpit v. Cote, 20 Quebec Super. Ct. 338, holding that a decree of the Roman catholic church, dissolving a marriage which was valid by the law of the country where it was performed on the ground that it was not authorized by that church, is void. See infra, page 88, note 8; page 89, note 15; page 99, note 76.

40. Hilton v. Roylance, 25 Utah 129, 69 Pac. 660, 95 Am. St. Rep. 821, 58 L. R. A. 723.

Statutory exception; imprisonment for life.—Wis. Rev. St. § 2355, provides that when a party shall be sentenced to imprisonment for life, his marriage shall be thereby absolutely dissolved without any judgment of divorce or other legal process; and under this provision a marriage dissolved by a sentence of imprisonment for life is not restored by the subsequent reversal of the sentence. State v. Duket, 90 Wis. 272, 63 N. W. 83, 43 Am. St. Rep. 928, 31 L. R. A. 515.

Separation of minor spouses.—As to effect of a statute providing, in the case of mar-non-law marriages as well as to those formally solemnized,⁴¹ and to such as may be voidable for cause, although a party to a marriage absolutely void ab initio may contract a subsequent valid marriage without the protection of a judicial decree.⁴²

2. STATUTORY PROVISIONS. Although the jurisdiction of the courts to annul marriages may in certain cases exist independently of statute and in virtue of their general equity powers,⁴³ these powers may in this particular be either enlarged or restricted by statutes, which must then be looked to as the measure of their authority.⁴⁴ Such statutes are not necessarily inconsistent with laws denouncing as crimes some of the causes or acts which furnish grounds for annulment, or providing additional remedies to the injured party, and should be so construed if possible that all may stand and be effective.⁴⁵ The repeal of a statute legalizing informal or defective marriages will not have the effect of dissolving them.⁴⁶

3. NECESSITY AND PROPRIETY OF ANNULING VOID MARRIAGE. A marriage absolutely void at the time it was contracted, as where it was bigamous,⁴⁷ is no impediment to either party in contracting a subsequent lawful marriage, nor is it necessary that it should be first annulled by judicial decree.⁴⁸ Nevertheless, in this and other cases of absolute nullity, the courts will make a decree on proper application and proofs, as well for the sake of the good order of society as for the quiet and relief of the injured party and the adjustment of property interests.⁴⁹

4. ANNULMENT IN DIVORCE PROCEEDINGS. A decree annulling a marriage may be entered in a proper case, although the relief asked is a divorce.⁵⁰ So defendant in a divorce proceeding may allege the nullity of the marriage and have a decree on proper proofs.⁵¹

B. Grounds—1. IN GENERAL. A suit for the annulment of a marriage, unlike a suit for divorce, must be founded on some cause which existed at the riage of parties either of whom is under the age of consent, that if they shall separate during such nonage and not subsequently cohabit, the marriage shall be deemed void without legal process see People v. Schoonmaker, 119 Mich. 242, 77 N. W. 934.

Unexplained absence of spouse for five years, and validity of marriage of remaining spouse thereafter contracted see infra, note 73.

Statutory authority for decree.—In a case in New Jersey the court refused to annul a marriage for impotence, in the absence of statutory authority therefor, holding that the general jurisdiction of equity extends only to annulling contracts which are void, while the contract of marriage in this case was voidable only. Anonymous, 24 N. J. Eq. 19.

What constitutes impotence.—To constitute impotence, it is not necessary that there should be an inability for procreation, that is, incapacity on the part of the male to beget children, or on the part of the female to conceive; for although this condition may exist, there is no impotence in the legal sense if there is a mutual capacity for complete sexual intercourse; but otherwise if the act of copulation is impossible from any genital or other defect. Anonymous, 89 Ala. 291, 7 So. 100, 18 Am. must be shown to have existed at the time of the marriage,⁵⁷ and to be incurable.⁵⁸ It is also cause for annulment if either party was suffering at the time of the marriage from a chronic and contagious venereal disease, if it prevents the consummation of the marriage, or if it was so concealed or misrepresented as to constitute a fraud on the other party,⁵⁹ and in some states, by statute, this is also true of epilepsy.⁶⁰ Either the husband or wife may complain of the other's impotence and have a decree.⁶¹

3. MENTAL INCAPACITY.⁶² A marriage may be annulled where either of the Sterility.—Although the term "impotence" is sometimes used as synonymous with "sterility," it is properly used only of the male. Black L. Dict.; Century Dict. And mere sterility or barrenness can in no case be sufficient ground for decreeing the marriage void. Devanbagh v. Devanbagh, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 554, 28 Am. Dec. 443. And in any event one who marries a woman knowing her to be past the age of child-bearing cannot have the marriage annulled on the ground of her sterility. Briggs v. Morgan, 2 Hagg. Cons. 324; Brown v. Brown, 1 Hagg. Eccl. 523.

Removal of ovaries.—The possession of the organs necessary to conception cannot be held essential to capacity to enter into the marriage state, so long as there is no impediment to the indulgence of the passions incident to that state; and in this respect there is no essential difference between a woman who, through no fault of her own, has lost her ovaries by a surgical operation, and one who has suffered the same result through the operation of nature. Wendel v. Wendel, 30 N. Y. App. Div. 447, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 72 [reversing 22 Misc. 152, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 375].

Concealment of impotence as fraud.—The contracting of a marriage by one who is conscious of his own impotence with one who is ignorant of it is regarded as a gross fraud. Guilford v. Oxford, 9 Conn. 321; Benton v. Benton, 1 Day (Conn.) 111; Briggs v. Morgan, 3 Phillim. 325.

Curability by surgery.—There is no ground for a decree of nullity if the defect or malformation is of such a nature that it might be removed or remedied by a surgical operation without serious danger to life, and the party affected refuses to submit thereto. Devanbagh v. Devanbagh, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 175. See also Serrell v. Serrell, 31 L. J. P. & M. 55, 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 691, 2 Swab. & Tr. 422. But see *W. v. But compare Vondal v. Vondal, 175 Mass. 383, 56 N. E. 586, 78 Am. St. Rep. 502, where a decree was refused, although the wife had concealed the fact that she was afflicted with syphilis at the time of the marriage, as it was not in a contagious form at that time, although it would probably taint any issue of the marriage, and there had been cohabitation for four months.

60. See Gould v. Gould, 78 Conn. 242, 61 Atl. 604, 2 L. R. A. N. S. 531, holding that where a statute prohibiting persons afflicted with epilepsy to marry does not expressly declare the marriage of such a person to be void, it is not a nullity at common law; but if the marriage was induced by fraudulent concealment or misrepresentation, it may be annulled on that ground.

61. Briggs v. Morgan, 3 Phillim. 325.

An impotent man cannot maintain a nullity suit merely on the ground of his own impotency; but if a woman altogether repudiates the relation of wife and the obligations of the marriage contract, the impotent man may show that there is no verum matrimonium, and maintain such a suit. A. v. A., L. R. 19 Ir. 403. See infra, VIII, C, 4, a.

parties was an idiot or a lunatic at the time it was contracted.⁶³ Mere weakness or imbecility of mind is not sufficient for this purpose, nor eccentricity or partial dementia, but it must be such a general mental derangement as prevents the party from comprehending the nature of the contract of marriage and from giving to it his free and intelligent consent.⁶⁴ Insanity occurring after the marriage is not ground for its annulment;⁶⁵ but on the other hand, if it existed at the time of the marriage, it is immaterial that the person was sane before and after that time, or that he is habitually sane.⁶⁶

4. INTOXICATION⁶⁷ AT TIME OF MARRIAGE. Intoxication from alcohol, if so profound as to deprive the party of all reason and comprehension of what he is doing, and of the nature and effect of his acts, will be sufficient ground to annul a marriage contracted by him while in that condition.⁶⁸

5. PREGNANCY AT TIME OF MARRIAGE. When a woman about to marry pretends to be chaste and conceals from her prospective husband the fact that she is then pregnant by another man, the concealment is such a fraud as to justify the annulment of the marriage.⁶⁹ But this relief will not be granted where the com-

6. PRIOR EXISTING MARRIAGE.⁷² If either of the parties to a marriage had a lawful spouse living and undivorced at the time, the second marriage is absolutely void and may be so declared by decree of court in proper proceedings.⁷³ But this is not the case where the first marriage was void, although it has not been so declared judicially; in that event it constitutes no ground for annulling the second marriage.⁷⁴ Nor does it cause the nullity of the second marriage if, at the time of its occurrence, such former spouse had been lawfully divorced by competent judicial decree.⁷⁵ But if the former marriage was fully in force at the time of the second marriage, it is not necessary that it should continue in force to the commencement of the action of nullity.⁷⁶

7. MISTAKE. Dissolution of second bigamous marriage by consent of parties see supra, VIII, A, 1.

Necessity and propriety of decree annulling second bigamous marriage see supra, VIII, A, 3.

Unexplained absence for five years.—Where a wife married a second time, believing that her former husband, who had not been heard from for more than five years, was dead, such marriage is voidable only, under the statute of New York providing that a marriage by a person having a spouse living shall be void only from the time of its annulment by a competent court, where such spouse shall have absented himself for five years without being known by such person to be living. Taylor v. Taylor, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 566, 55 N. Y. Suppl. 1052, 28 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 323. And see Hervey v. Hervey, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 218. Compare Spicer v. Spicer, 16 Abb. Pr. N. S. (N. Y.) 112.

75. Clarke v. Clarke, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 228. See DIVORCE, 14 Cyc. 729. And see Boehs v. Hanger, (N. J. Ch. 1905) 59 Atl. 904, where the husband misled the wife by a false statement that he had never been married, whereas he had been divorced from his former wife, and she would not have consented to the marriage but for the deception, being a member of a church under whose laws a marriage could not be dissolved except by the death of one of the contracting parties and by which a marriage with a divorced person was a sin. The wife's prayer for annulment of the marriage was refused, because her marriage was valid by the law of the land and could not be annulled because invalid by the law of the church.

76. Hervey v. Hervey, 92 N. Y. Suppl. 218. But compare Turner v. Turner, 189 Mass. 373, 75 N. E. 612, 109 Am. St. Rep. 643.

ing or intending that it should be an actual present marriage,⁷⁸ or in the case of a mock marriage performed in jest and not intended by either party to be a binding contract of marriage.⁷⁹

8. FRAUD, MISREPRESENTATION, OR IMPOSITION.⁸⁰ Fraud which vitiates the marriage contract is cause for its annulment.⁸¹ But the fraud or falsehood must be one which goes to the very fundamentals or essentials of the marital relation;⁸² deceit, concealment, or misrepresentation concerning the party's health, character, wealth, social position, previous history or habits, is not sufficient for this purpose,⁸³ except perhaps in New York, where the rule has been broadly laid down that every misrepresentation of a material fact, made with intent to induce the other party to enter into the marriage contract, and without which it would not have

False personation.—It is not a cause of nullity that one assumes a false name and thereby deludes another into marriage with him, there being no mistake as to the identity of the person. Meyer v. Meyer, 7 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 627, 4 Cinc. L. Bul. 368; Clowes v. Jones, 3 Curt. Eccl. 185. But see Rex v. Burton-upon-Trent, 3 M. & S. 537, 16 Rev. Rep. 350. Otherwise where there is a mistake as to the person, as where A, intending to marry B, is actually united to C, whom he has no intention of marrying, by means of a substitution or other deception. Meyer v. Meyer, supra; Reg. v. Millis, 10 Cl. & F. 534, 785, 8 Eng. Reprint 844; 2 Kent Comm. 77.

"Mistake in the person" in a statute.—This phrase means mistake in the identity of the person, not mistake as to his character, attributes, condition in life, or previous habits; and hence mistake as to the wife's previous character for chastity is not ground for annulment under the statute. Delpit v. Young, 51 La. Ann. 923, 25 So. 547.

78. Clark v. Field, 13 Vt. 460. And see Blumenthal v. Tannenholtz, 31 N. J. Eq. 194 (where the bill was filed by an infant wife to annul her marriage on the ground of her husband's fraud and misrepresentation as to the effect of a Jewish ceremony of marriage which she at the time believed to be merely a betrothal); Barnes v. Wyethe, 28 Vt. 41 (where the authorities of a certain town hired A, who was settled in another town, to marry B, a pauper, in order to impose B's support on that town, A never intending to fulfil the obligations of marriage, and the contract was annulled on B's petition).

Because of fraud in its inducement, the court of divorce has no power to pronounce a decree of nullity of marriage, or to dissolve a marriage. Templeton v. Tyree, L. R. 2 P. & D. 420, 41 L. J. P. & M. 86, 27 L. T. Rep. N. S. 429, 21 Wkly. Rep. 81.

False representations as to health.—The fraudulent concealment of the fact of impotence or of a chronic venereal disease will be ground for annulling the marriage. Crane v. Crane, 62 N. J. Eq. 21, 49 Atl. 734. And see supra, VIII, B, 2. So also of the fact that the party is an epileptic, where a statute forbids such persons to marry. Gould v. Gould, 78 Conn. 242, 61 Atl. 604, 2 L. R. A. N. S. 531. But this does not apply to minor physical ailments or diseases not affecting the marital relation, as shown in the case of Kraus v. Kraus, 9 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 515, 6 Ohio N. P. 248, where a husband asked the annulment of the marriage on the ground that his wife had a glass eye.

Concealment of insanity is ground for annulling the marriage. See supra, VIII, B, 3. And see Keyes v. Keyes, 22 N. H. 553.

False representations as to previous chastity are not ground for decreeing annulment of the marriage. Farr v. Farr, 2 MacArthur (D. C.) 35; Leavitt v. Leavitt, 13 Mich. 452; Hedden v. Hedden, 21 N. J. Eq. 61; Varney v. Varney, 52 Wis. 120, 8 N. W. 739, 38 Am. Rep. 726. So in Glean v. Glean, 70 N. Y. App. Div. 576, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 622, where the husband concealed the fact that he had unlawfully cohabited for several years with another woman and had several children by her, and it was held not such fraud as to vitiate the marriage. But it is doubtful whether this decision could be sustained in view of the broad rule laid down in Di Lorenzo v. Di Lorenzo, 174 N. Y. 467, 67 N. E. 63, 95 Am. St. Rep. 609, 63 L. R. A. 92. See infra, note 84.

been made, authorizes its annulment.⁸⁴ But some courts are disposed to relax the severity of this rule, especially where the fraud or deceit has been accompanied by some measure of coercion or imposition, in the case of very young girls duped or decoyed into an unsuitable marriage,⁸⁵ and in the case of aged persons of feeble intelligence who have been tricked or deluded.⁸⁶ In every case, however, the fraud must have been an effective cause, and one cannot complain of a false representation where he knew the truth at the time,⁸⁷ where it was rendered possible only by his own previous immoral conduct,⁸⁸ or where the fraud only affects third persons.⁸⁹ Imposition in the nature of a fraud may also be ground for annulling the marriage, especially where it was exerted by playing upon the party's superstitions or religious delusions.⁹⁰

9. DURESS.⁹¹ A marriage brought about by force, duress, abduction, or terror under threats may be annulled.⁹² But these influences must have been brought Concealment of pregnancy will be ground for annulling the marriage. See supra, VIII, B, 5.

Deceit as to paternity of bastard child may be sufficient cause for a decree annulling the marriage. Scott v. Shufeldt, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 43.

Misrepresentation as to previous marriage or divorce.—A deceit or falsehood as to the fact of the party's previous marriage, or a false representation as to the death of the former spouse, such spouse having been in fact divorced, is no ground for annulling the marriage, provided of course that the former marriage was not in force at the time of the second. Donnelly v. Strong, 175 Mass. 157, 55 N. E. 892; Clarke v. Clarke, 11 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 228.

Previous criminal record.—It is not ground for annulling a marriage that the husband concealed the fact that he had previously served a term in the penitentiary. Wier v. Still, 31 Iowa 107.

Kleptomania.—A marriage is not avoided for fraud by reason of the concealment of the fact that the wife was at the time a kleptomaniac. Lewis v. Lewis, 44 Minn. 124, 46 N. W. 323, 20 Am. St. Rep. 559, 9 L. R. A. 505.

84. Di Lorenzo v. Di Lorenzo, 174 N. Y. 467, 67 N. E. 63, 95 Am. St. Rep. 609, 63 L. R. A. 92 [reversing 71 N. Y. App. Div. 509, 75 N. Y. Suppl. 878 (reversing 34 Misc. 692, 70 N. Y. Suppl. 1012)], holding that where defendant induces plaintiff to marry her by false representations that he is the father of her bastard child, it is obtaining his consent to the marriage by fraud, within the meaning of the statute, and authorizes the dissolution of the marriage. So also in King v. Brewer, 8 Misc. (N. Y.) 587, 29 N. Y. Suppl. 1114, 31 Abb. N. Cas. 325, where the wife discovered after marriage that the husband's business was conducting a pool room, which is a statutory crime in New York. And so in Keyes v. Keyes, 6 Misc. (N. Y.) 355, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 910, where she was led to believe that he was an honest and industrious man, but in fact he was a professional thief. But on the other hand see Shady v. Logan, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 329, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 1010, holding that the concealment by a woman of the fact that she has borne a bastard child is not such fraud as will justify the annulment of the marriage. And see Fisk v. Fisk, 6 N. Y. App. Div. 432, 39 N. Y. Suppl. 537, where the court refused to annul a marriage because of a representation by the woman that she had never been married, when in fact she had been married but had been legally divorced.

to bear by the other contracting party or with his procurement or connivance.⁹³ And threats of any legal or penal measures authorized by law and the circumstances of the case will not invalidate the contract.⁹⁴ Thus, in particular, if a man under lawful arrest for seduction or bastardy, the complaint being based on probable cause, chooses to marry the woman as a means of obtaining his release and terminating the proceedings against him, he cannot allege duress as a ground for annulling the marriage.⁹⁵ But it is otherwise if the prosecution was maliciously instituted and without probable cause,⁹⁶ or if the accused, being pliant and inexperienced, is bullied by the magistrate and yields under threats of more severe penalties than the law allows.⁹⁷

10. CONSANGUINITY⁹⁸ OR AFFINITY.⁹⁹ A marriage between relations within the prohibited degrees is void, its continuance is repugnant to good morals and public policy, and it will be annulled at the instance of either party, notwithstanding the applicant entered into it knowingly and wilfully.¹

C. Actions For Annulment²—1. NATURE AND FORM OF REMEDY. Unless otherwise provided by statute, a proceeding in a state court for the annulment of a marriage should be by bill in equity or its equivalent,³ and the prayer for relief should specifically ask that the marriage be declared null and void, and not for a divorce, which is an entirely different matter.⁴ Further, the question of the nullity of a marriage should be made the subject of a direct proceeding, and

Difference between nullity and divorce.—The purpose of a divorce suit is to dissolve a valid marriage which the parties had legal capacity to contract and generally for subsequent cause, while a nullity suit is for the judicial annulment of a marriage which was voidable or absolutely void when contracted should not be adjudicated as a matter merely collateral or incidental to an action for another purpose,⁵ although relief of this kind may properly be sought by answer or crossbill in a suit for divorce or maintenance.⁶

2. JURISDICTION AND AUTHORITY OF COURT.⁷ A court of chancery, in the exercise of its ordinary powers and jurisdiction and without the authority of a statute, may take jurisdiction of a suit to annul a marriage, where the cause alleged is one of the well known grounds on which equity gives relief in cases of contract, such as fraud, error, duress, or mental incapacity,⁸ although not where the marriage is alleged to be void on account of a prior existing marriage, as in that case the proceedings must be founded on a statute.⁹ Jurisdiction depends upon the residence of complainant or petitioner, and it is immaterial where the marriage was solemnized.¹⁰ Defendant is brought within the jurisdiction by personal for causes then existing. Pyott v. Pyott, 191 Ill. 280, 61 N. E. 88. And see Ridgely v. Ridgely, 79 Md. 298, 29 Atl. 597, 25 L. E. A. 800.

5. Williamson v. Williamson, 56 N. C. 446; Johnson v. Kincade, 37 N. C. 470. And see Uhl v. Uhl, 52 Cal. 250, holding that a cause of action to annul a marriage by reason of a former marriage of plaintiff to one who is still alive cannot be joined with a cause of action to quiet her title to her separate property, in which defendant falsely claims an interest.

Necessity of prayer for decree.—Where defendant, by his plea to an action for separation from bed and board, alleges the nullity of his marriage with plaintiff, but does not ask that the nullity be judicially pronounced, the court cannot take his pretensions into consideration. Smith v. Cook, 24 Quebec Super. Ct. 469.

The parties had presented cross suits, one for nullity of marriage on the ground of the man's impotence, the other for dissolution on the ground of the woman's adultery. It was held in the course of the nullity suit that the woman might be cross-examined as to her adultery with the co-respondent in the dissolution suit. M. v. D., 10 P. D. 175, 34 Wkly. Rep. 48.

Contra, in Pennsylvania.—The courts of this state do not possess general equity powers, but only such as have been conferred upon them by statute, and therefore have no jurisdiction to determine the validity of a marriage alleged to be void on account of the lunacy of one of the parties. Pitcairn v. Pitcairn, 201 Pa. St. 368, 50 Atl. 963. And see Thompson v. Thompson, 10 Phila. 131.

So also in South Carolina.—See Mattison v. Mattison, 1 Strobb. Eq. 387, 47 Am. Dec. 541. But a court of equity in this state may decide upon the validity of a marriage so far as it affects rights of property in a suit in chancery. Young v. Naylor, 1 Hill Eq. 383.

Other remedy available.—The supreme court of Rhode Island will not take jurisdiction in equity to annul a marriage voidable on account of fraud in procuring it, since another ample remedy is provided by the statute relating to divorce. Selby v. Selby, 27 R. I. 172, 61 Atl. 142.

In Ontario the high court of justice has jurisdiction, where a marriage correct in form is ascertained to be void de jure by reason of the absence of some essential preliminary, to declare the same null and void ab initio. Lawless v. Chamberlain, 18 Ont. 296.

In Quebec it has been held that the civil tribunals cannot declare the nullity of a marriage between two catholics on the ground of impotence until the ecclesiastical decision has been given. *Langevin v. service of process or such constructive service as the statute may legally authorize.¹¹ The courts will be vigilant in these cases to guard against collusion of the parties, and will never make a decree unless entirely satisfied on this point.¹²

3. TIME TO SUE. A right of action for the annulment of a marriage accrues immediately upon knowledge or discovery of the invalidating fact or circumstance,¹³ and, unless sooner barred by some statute of limitation,¹⁴ continues until the marriage is dissolved by the death of one of the parties, after which event no decree of nullity will be made except under very exceptional circumstances.¹⁵ But long and unreasonable delay in bringing the suit, while not an absolute bar,¹⁶ may justify the refusal of a decree, especially where the case is not strong or not clearly proved, or where it may be taken as evidence of waiver or acquiescence or as indicating an ulterior motive in bringing the action.¹⁷

A marriage contracted previous to the promulgation of the civil code may be declared null seventeen years after its celebration, by reason of impotency existing at the time of the marriage, where the parties have lived separately since its celebration, and defendant has established his domicile in a foreign country, especially where such nullity has been ecclesiastically pronounced. *Languévin v. 4. PARTIES¹⁸—a. In General. In England and in some of the American states either of the parties to a void or voidable marriage may sue for its annulment, even though complainant himself caused or knew of the alleged disability, except only where the marriage was induced by his actual fraud.¹⁹ But generally in this country, it is only the innocent or injured party who may sue;²⁰ and no right to maintain such a suit is recognized in any third person,²¹ except that in some jurisdictions the father or mother of the injured party is permitted to maintain the action,²² and in others, by statute, this right is accorded to any "relative" of the

"Doctrine of want of sincerity."—Relief in suits of this nature is never accorded unless petitioner is prompt in seeking it and sincere in the motive for doing so. M. v. C., L. R. 2 P. & D. 414, 41 L. J. P. & M. 37, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 321, 20 Wkly. Rep. 495. A petitioner made cognizant within four or five years after her marriage of her husband's impotency could not delay proceedings for three years more, without being open to the charge of want of sincerity or promptitude. M. v. C., L. R. 2 P. & D. 414, 41 L. J. P. & M. 37, 26 L. T. Rep. N. S. 321, 20 Wkly. Rep. 495. The doctrine, designated as the "doctrine of want of sincerity" in an action of this kind, has been too much extended in recent English decisions, and that doctrine, apart from "approve" and "reprobate," has never been recognized by the law of Scotland. G. v. M., 10 App. Cas. 171, 53 L. T. Rep. N. S. 398, where it is said, however, that in a suit for nullity of marriage on the ground of impotency there may be facts and circumstances proved which so plainly imply on the part of the complaining spouse a recognition of the existence and validity of the marriage as to render it most inequitable and contrary to public policy that he or she should be permitted to go on to challenge it with effect. Where at the end of seven years' cohabitation a marriage had not been consummated through the impotence of the alleged husband, and the wife subsequently cohabited with another man, and upon the alleged husband discovering her misconduct she instituted a suit for nullity of marriage against him, and he a suit for dissolution of marriage against her, it was held that, the proof of impotence being clear, her conduct did not show such a want of sincerity as to deprive her of her right to have the marriage annulled. When the impotence is undoubted mere delay is not sufficient to disentitle the injured party to relief. M. v. D., 10 P. D. 75, 54 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 68, 33 Wkly. Rep. 657. See also L. v. B., [1895] P. 274, 64 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 121, 11 Reports 673, where the court refused to dismiss the petition on the ground of insincerity merely because of the delay in presenting the petition, and granted a decree nisi.

But in another case in New York, where the action was to have a certain marriage declared void by reason of defendant's fraud, and it appeared that plaintiff had subsequently married another person, and was seeking the probate of his will, which his heirs at law were contesting on the ground of her former marriage, it was held that they were properly admitted as parties. *Tilby v. injured party, provided the party himself is joined in the suit.²³ In case the injured party is insane and under guardianship, the suit should generally be brought in the name of the guardian,²⁴ and where the common-law disabilities of married women still exist, a wife bringing an action of this sort should not sue in her maiden name but as a wife and by her next friend.²⁵

b. Guardian For Defendant. Where defendant in a nullity suit is an infant or is insane, a guardian ad litem should be appointed.²⁶ But in Louisiana, where minors are emancipated by marriage, this is not necessary, at least in so far as the disability of infancy is concerned.²⁷

5. DEFENSES. Beside denying and disproving the facts relied on to show the invalidity of the marriage,²⁸ defendant in these cases may defend on the ground that complainant does not come into court with a good conscience and a clean record, having been guilty of fraud or misconduct,²⁹ or, as it is otherwise expressed,

Eliz. c. 2, § 7, to institute a suit to establish the nullity of his daughter's marriage; but where a father died after such suit was instituted and the pleadings in it were finished but before trial, it was held that the court had no authority to allow the widow and executrix of the father to take up the suit at the point at which it was left at the father's death. Bevan v. Macmahon, 5 Jur. N. S. 686, 28 L. J. P. & M. 127, 2 L. T. Rep. N. S. 255, 2 Swab. & Tr. 58, 8 Wkly. Rep. 453.

Whether the father has instituted the suit in his own right or as guardian of the minor, must appear upon the face of the petition. Wells v. Wells, 10 Jur. N. S. 444, 33 L. J. P. & M. 41, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 138, 3 Swab. & Tr. 364, 12 Wkly. Rep. 672.

In Louisiana it is ruled that where the nullity charged against a marriage is relative and not absolute, the contracting parties retain their status as married persons until such nullity is declared by a competent court; and therefore the father of a minor emancipated by marriage has no right of action in himself to sue for the annulment of the marriage, and his minor son does not need his aid in bringing the suit. Delpit v. Young, 51 La. Ann. 923, 25 So. 547.

Proc. §§ 1744, 1750, authorizing a relative of one of the parties to a marriage to bring suit for its annulment where such party had not attained the legal age of consent, or his consent was obtained by force or fraud, or where he was a lunatic. And see on the construction and interpretation of this statute Coddington v. Larner, 75 N. Y. App. Div. 532, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 276; Fero v. Fero, 62 N. Y. App. Div. 470, 70 N. Y. Collateral relatives.—Where it was pleaded in such action that plaintiff, being only a relative of the deceased in the collateral line, was not entitled to demand the nullity of the marriage, it was held that where the status of the wife was recognized collateral relations had no power to dispute the marriage. Scott v. Paquet, 4 L. C. Jur. 149 [confirmed in 11 L. C. Jur. 289].

Under D. C. Code, § 1286, a proceeding on behalf of a lunatic to annul a marriage contracted by him during his lunacy is properly instituted by his next friend and not by his committee; but the committee should be made a party defendant to such a proceeding. Mackey v. Peters, 22 App. Cas. 341.

Where no guardian ad litem is appointed for defendant in such a case, complainant will derive no benefit from the tacit admission of the fraud charged in the bill arising from the wife's suffering such bill to be taken as confessed against her. *Montgomery v. And a parent's action to annul the marriage of his minor son on account of his not having attained the legal age of consent cannot be defeated by an answer setting up as a counter-claim the infidelity of the minor and asking for a divorce. Slocum v. Slocum, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 143, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 447. In Taverner v. Ditchford, 33 L. J. P. & M. 105, where, to a petition by a woman for a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of impotence, respondent pleaded that since the marriage petitioner had committed adultery, and the court ordered the plea to be struck out as impertinent. And so in Williams v. Homfray, 6 Jur. N. S. 151, 29 L. J. P. & M. 62, 2 Swab. & Tr. 30, where a husband presented a petition praying that his marriage, de facto celebrated with the woman, might be annulled by reason of her malformation, and she denied the malformation, pleaded cruelty, and prayed for a judicial separation by reason thereof, and it was held that in a suit for nullity of marriage the only question to be decided is marriage or no marriage, and that consequently a charge of cruelty against the husband and a prayer for a judicial separation contained in an answer must be struck out.

Effect of agreements between parties.—In a petition by a husband against the wife praying that the marriage celebrated between them might be declared void on the ground of her incapacity, respondent pleaded that she and petitioner after a year's cohabitation had agreed to live apart, and had bound themselves not to make any claim against each other either in a court of law or equity; and that if either party should break the agreement the other should be entitled to an injunction to restrain such breach; that it was further agreed that if respondent committed a breach of agreement petitioner should be entitled to proceed for a declaration of nullity; and that there had been no breach of agreement on the part of respondent. It was held that respondent's agreement not to sue was a sufficient consideration for the husband's engagement to do the like, and that such an agreement, although not by deed, was therefore a bar to the petition for a declaration of nullity. Aldridge v. Aldridge, 13 P. D. 210, 58 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 8, 59 L. T. Rep. N. S. 896, 37 Wkly. Rep. 240. Compare Wilson v. Wilson, 14 Sim. 405, 37 Eng. Ch. 405, 60 Eng. Reprint 415 [affirmed in 1 H. L. Allegation of marriage as still subsisting.—Where the marriage is sought to be annulled on a ground which makes it voidable only and or ignorance of the disability or impediment alleged,⁸⁶ and ask for a decree annulling the marriage rather than for a decree of divorce.⁸⁷ The answer may controvert the allegations of plaintiff,⁸⁸ or defendant may, if he has sufficient ground for it, put in a cross complaint asking for a divorce.⁸⁹

7. EVIDENCE⁴⁰ — a. In General. The burden is on plaintiff to sustain his material allegations,⁴¹ and in view of the peculiar nature of the contract of marriage and the grave consequences of dissolving it, the courts will not grant a decree except upon the production of clear, satisfactory, and convincing evidence,⁴² which, however, according to the circumstances of the case may be either direct or inferential.⁴³ According to the generally accepted rule, such a decree will not be given on the mere admissions or confessions of the parties alone without not void, the complaint is not bad for averring that the parties were married on a certain day "and ever since have been, and now are, husband and wife." Linebaugh v. Linebaugh, 137 Cal. 26, 69 Pac. 616.

A counter-claim, interposed by a wife to an action brought under the statute by her mother-in-law to annul her son's marriage on the ground that he had not attained the age of legal consent, alleging the son's adultery and demanding a divorce from him is demurrable for insufficiency, as the son is not a party to the action and relief against him is impossible therein. *Slocum v. Expert medical testimony.—As a general rule, a decree of nullity of marriage on the ground of malformation will not be granted, unless the existence of incurable malformation is proved by a medical man who has examined the person of the respondent. T. v. M., L. R. 1 P. & D. 31, 35 L. J. P. & M. 10, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 614. Upon the question of incapacity, although no application had been made for a monition or an order for a personal inspection of either of the parties, the court received medical evidence of an examination. Serrell v. Serrell, 2 Swab. & Tr. 422, 31 L. J. P. & M. 55, 5 L. T. Rep. N. S. 691. See also Williams v. Homfray, 7 Jur. N. S. 315, 30 L. J. P. & M. 73, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 89, 2 Swab. & Tr. 240, 9 Wkly. 43. See cases cited infra, this note.

Any evidence is admissible in a suit for nullity which tends to throw light on the case set up by petitioner or respondent during their cohabitation, although the only issues raised by the pleadings are the respondent's impotency and the consummation of the marriage. X. v. Y., 34 L. J. P. & M. 81.

Inquisition of lunacy.—An inquisition of lunacy found two days after the marriage and declaring that the husband was of unsound mind and had been so for six months previous is only presumptive evidence of his insanity on the day of the marriage. Banker v. Banker, 63 N. Y. 409.

Marriage certificate.—An exemplified copy of a paper purporting to be a certificate of a marriage ceremony, signed by a person without any designation of character, and without proof of its genuineness, on file in the office of a clerk of a court in another state, without proof of the laws of that state, is not sufficient proof of such marriage ceremony to sustain a decree of nullity of a later marriage by reason of it. Rooney v. Rooney, 54 N. J. Eq. 231, 34 Atl. 682.

Proof of physical capacity.—In an action to annul a marriage on the ground of the physical incapacity of the wife, proof that in due time after the marriage she gave birth to twins is sufficient to support a decree in her favor. Riley v. Riley, 73 Hun (N. Y.) 575, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 164.

Identity of parties.—In an undefended suit satisfactory extraneous evidence,⁴⁴ or upon the uncorroborated testimony of plaintiff.⁴⁵

b. Physical Examination. Where the ground of nullity alleged is the impotence or physical incapacity of either party, the court, it has been held, has power to require such party to submit to an examination of his person by competent phy-for nullity on the ground of impotence, although the identity of both parties is proved in the registry at the time of the medical examination, the identity of the party not appearing must be proved again in open court. H. v. G., 69 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 120.

Duress.—Evidence sufficient to show duress see Ford v. Stier, [1896] P. 1, 65 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 13, 73 L. T. Rep. N. S. 632, 11 Wkly. Rep. 668; Scott v. Sebright, 12 P. D. 21, 56 L. J. P. The fact of the physical incapacity of either a husband or a wife to consummate a marriage may be inferred from his or her conduct during their married life. B. v. B., [1901] P. 39, 70 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 4.

Admission of paternity by third person.—In a husband's action to annul a marriage for fraud, an admission of a third person that he is the father of a child borne by the wife after the marriage but begotten before does not overcome the legal presumption that the child is the child of the husband. Montgomery v. Montgomery, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 132.

c. Triennial Cohabitation Rule. The canon law rule of triennial cohabitation has not been recognized in England⁴⁸ beyond this point, that where a husband or a wife seeks a decree of nullity propter impotentiam, if there is no more evidence than that they have for a period of three years lived together in the same house and with ordinary opportunities of intercourse, and it is clearly proved that there has been no consummation of the marriage, inability on the part of the one or the other to consummate it will be presumed.⁴⁹ On the other hand, the presumption of inability to be drawn from the fact of non-consummation after three years' cohabitation is capable of being rebutted.⁵⁰ And also every case need not be fortified with the presumption of inability; for although no presumption can be raised from the absence of consummation within a less period than three years,⁵¹

English practice.—The appointment of two medical inspectors rests with the court; but it will allow the parties to select them, and should they not agree, each will be allowed to nominate one. C. v. C., 32 L. J. P. & M. 12. Each party has a right to nominate two medical inspectors to examine him or her. It is not necessary that both parties should be examined by the same inspectors. B. v. C., 32 L. J. P. & M. 135. But it is not the practice of the court to make an order for an inspection of petitioner. B. v. L., 16 Wkly. Rep. 943. Petitioner, on moving for an appointment of inspectors, should also move for an order that respondent submit to inspection. S. v. E., 31 L. J. P. & M. 164.

Respondent not within the jurisdiction.—In a suit for nullity by a man on the ground of malformation, no evidence could be given that respondent was suffering from an incurable defect, where she had never submitted to a medical examination, and, being out of the jurisdiction, had not been personally served with the citation. The court suspended its decree in order to give petitioner an opportunity of having her examined if she should thereafter be found within the jurisdiction. T. v. M., L. R. 1 P. & D. 31, 35 L. J. P. & M. 10, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 614.

Neither is the court nor are the parties concluded by the terms of the report of medical inspectors, but the inspectors themselves and other medical men may be examined. Williams v. Homfray, 7 Jur. N. S. 315, 30 L. J. P. & M. 73, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 89, 2 Swab. & Tr. 240, 9 Wkly. Rep. 619.

Decree pro confesso.—In Quebec where in an action to annul a marriage on the ground of impotency the proof is otherwise insufficient, the consort against whom the action is brought may be compelled to submit to a surgical examination, and in default of doing so the grounds of action may be taken pro confesso and judgment rendered accordingly. Dorion v. Laurent, 17 L. C. Jur. 324.

Where there had been a cohabitation for two years and ten months without consummation, but the court was not satisfied on the evidence that the failure to consummate arose from the impotency of the husband, it suspended its decree and intimated that petitioner should forthwith return to cohabitation in order to give an opportunity for consummation. Marshall v. Hamilton, 10 Jur. N. S. 853, 33 L. J. P. & M. 159, 10 L. T. Rep. N. S. 787, 13 Wkly. Rep. 108. But afterward, on affidavits to the effect that the woman had returned to cohabitation and that the marriage remained unconsummated, the court made a decree of nullity, the husband not appearing. M. v. H., 11 L. T. Rep. N. S. 317, 3 Swab. & Tr. 592, 13 Wkly. Rep. 108.

yet positive evidence may be given from which the same inference of inability may be drawn.⁵²

8. TRIAL OR HEARING⁵³ — a. Reference.⁵⁴ Nullity suits may generally be referred to a master or referee to take and report the evidence,⁵⁵ but the court must act on his report; a sentence annulling a marriage, entered up ex parte by plaintiff on the referee's report, without application to the court, is irregular.⁵⁶

b. Trial by Jury.⁵⁷ Suits for the annulment of marriage contracts being originally cognizable in the English ecclesiastical courts, where juries were not summoned, and being now generally considered as addressed to the equitable jurisdiction of our courts, a trial by jury is not demandable as of right in such actions unless granted by the local statute.⁵⁸ But even without statutory directions, the court may frame and submit to a jury issues as to disputed questions of fact.⁵⁹

9. JUDGMENT OR DECREE⁶⁰ — a. Relief Granted — (i) IN GENERAL. If the issues are found for complainant, the judgment or decree will declare the pretended marriage null and void; if for defendant, the bill will be dismissed.⁶¹ Incidentally or as collateral to the decree the court has power to make such

52. Lewis v. Hayward, 35 L. J. P. & M. 105.

The object of the triennial cohabitation rule is to provide that sufficient time may be afforded for ascertaining beyond a doubt the true condition of the party complained of. If the court can be satisfied by circumstances that the complaint of the promoter of the suit is well founded, it never ought to be driven sine gravissima causa after a cohabitation, although less than three years, to order a return. U. r. F., 2 Rob. Eccl. 618.

When the court is satisfied by other evidence, for example, that of petitioner herself, of the man's impotence, the rule of apparent virginity after a cohabitation of three years does not apply. D. r. F., 11 Jur. N. S. 307, 34 L. J. P. & M. 66, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 84, 4 Swab. & Tr. 86, 13 Wkly. Rep. 546.

If impotence is clearly proved the court never resorts to the rule. D. v. F., 11 Jur. N. S. 307, 34 L. J. P. & M. 66, 12 L. T. Rep. N. S. 84, 4 Swab. & Tr. 86, 13 Wkly. Rep. 546.

Although the rule has been relaxed where the malformation is congenital or manifest and incurable, yet a cohabitation of only a few months will not be sufficient, especially if the impotency is ascribable to a temporary cause. S. v. E., 9 Jur. N. S. 698, 32 L. J. P. & M. 153, 8 L. T. Rep. N. S. 643, 3 Swab. & Tr. 240, 12 Wkly. Rep. 19.

A suit on the ground of alleged impotency is unfit to be tried before a jury or in open court; and the judge has a discretionary power to hear in camera all suits which the ancient ecclesiastical courts would have heard privately. 59. Maier v. Lillibridge, 112 Mich. 491, 70 N. W. 1032, holding that the court, in a nullity suit, may on its own motion frame and submit an issue to a jury, and that the verdict of the jury thereon is not conclusive on the court but merely advisory; also that the statute in Michigan (Howell Annot. St. § 6622) declaring that all issues on the legality of marriage, except where physical capacity is involved, shall be tried by a jury, is not mandatory; and that where a proceeding to annul a marriage has been noticed for hearing without mention of a desire for a trial by jury, and complainant is in attendance and ready for trial, the court may in its discretion refuse defendant's request for a jury trial on the issue of complainant's mental competency, on the ground that the right to such trial has been waived.

Question for jury as to mental capacity.—Where the statute makes mental incapacity a cause of annulment but does not define the extent or degree of insanity which shall have this effect, the question whether the party at the time of the marriage was laboring under such a defect of reason from disease of the mind as not to know the nature of the act he was performing is a question of fact to be determined by the jury. Doe v. Roe, 1 Edm. Sel. Cas. (N. Y.) 344.

60. Judgment or decree generally see EQUITY; JUDGMENTS.

61. Crump v. Morgan, 38 N. C. 91, 40 Am. Dec. 447.

In the kingdom of Hawaii the power to annul marriage was based solely on the statute and was limited by it; hence it was orders as may be necessary to adjust and fix the rights and interests of the parties left unsettled by the dissolution of their marital relation.⁶²

(ii) ALIMONY AND ALLOWANCES.⁶³ As a general rule the right to alimony depends on a valid and subsisting marriage, since without this there is no obligation for the support of the alleged wife, and before it can be claimed or allowed the marriage must be proved or admitted, or, if it is contested, there must appear to the court a fair probability that it will be established.⁶⁴ Hence where a wife brings suit for the annulment of the marriage, thereby denying the fundamental necessary for the decree to state a statutory ground therefor. Puuku v. Kaleleku, 8 Hawaii 77.

Dismissal on motion without costs.—A wife petitioner obtained a decree nisi for nullity, on the ground of her husband's impotence, in camera. Subsequently the king's proctor intervened. Previous to such intervention petitioner had herself instructed her solicitor to take steps to get her petition dismissed and the decree nisi rescinded. On a motion being made in open court to this effect, the president, having considered the matter in chambers, allowed the decree nisi to be rescinded and the petition dismissed on petitioner's own motion, and—the king's proctor consenting—without condemning her in his costs. A. v. A., [1901] P. 284, 70 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 90, 85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 171.

Decree nisi under English practice.—The principle on which decrees of nullity of marriage have been ordered to be decrees nisi in the first instance is that the queen's proctor may have an opportunity of intervening wherever there is any doubt as to the facts of the case. Where, however, the status of the parties is definitely settled, as where it has been proved beyond question that the marriage which it is sought to set aside was bigamous, there is no reason why the court should not at once exercise its discretion and relieve a petitioner from the obligation to pay alimony pendente lite between decree nisi and decree absolute. Childers v. Childers, 68 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 90. See also Yarrow v. Yarrow, [1892] P. 92, 61 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 69, 66 L. T. Rep. N. S. 383; Durham v. Durham, 10 P. D. 80; M. v. B., L. R. 3 P. & D. 200, 43 L. J. P. & M. 42, 30 L. T. Rep. N. S. 345, 910, 22 Wkly. Rep. 556; Hancock v. Peaty, L. R. 1 P. & D. 335, 36 L. J. P. & M. 57, 16 L. T. Rep. N. S. 182, 15 Wkly. Rep. 719.

62. Custody of insane plaintiff.—Where the marriage of an insane person is annulled at the suit of his guardian, it is proper for the decree to determine the right of the guardian to the absolute and exclusive control of the person and estate of his ward. Waymire v. Jetmore, 22 Ohio St. 271.

Custody of children.—A statute directing the custody of the children to be awarded to the innocent party has no application where the marriage is annulled on the ground of a prior existing marriage, but it appears that the parties voluntarily cohabited after knowledge of the facts and after suit brought, as neither party can be regarded as "innocent," and the court will leave the custody of the children where it is. Safford v. Safford, 27 N. Y. Suppl. 640, 31 Abb. N. Cas. 73.

Maintenance of children.—Under a statute authorizing the court to provide for the maintenance of the children by the guilty parent where the marriage is annulled for force, duress, or fraud, no such provision can be made where the ground of annulment is a prior existing marriage. Park v. Park, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 372, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 677. See also Langworthy v. Langworthy, 11 P. D. 85, 55 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 33, 54 L. T. Rep. N. S. 776, 34 Wkly. Rep. 356, for rule under English statutes.

Saving legitimacy of children.—Where a woman's second marriage was annulled because she had a husband living and undivorced, but it appeared that the second marriage was contracted in good faith and in the genuine belief that the former husband was dead, it was held proper for the court to insert in its decree of nullity a recital of such good faith and erroneous belief, in order to save the legitimacy of children begotten before the commencement of the suit. Glass v. Glass, 114 Mass. 563.

Stipulation to share costs.—Where the husband stipulated to pay half the referee's fees in an action by the wife to annul the marriage, such stipulation will be enforced, although in the absence of it he would not have been compelled to pay them. Bloodgood v. Bloodgood, 59 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 42.

Action by husband's mother.—In an action by a parent to annul the marriage of her infant son, alimony cannot be awarded against plaintiff. Stivers v. Wise, 18 N. Y. App. Div. 316, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 9.

What court allows alimony.—In order for an appellate court to make an allowance of alimony, counsel fees, and suit money while an appeal in an action to annul a marriage is pending therein, it must have other proof than that taken in the lower court on a similar application. Prine v. Prine, 36 Fla. 676, 18 So. 781, 34 L. R. A. 87. See Blankenmiester v. Blankenmiester, 106 Mo. App. 390, 80 S. W. 706.

fact on which a claim for alimony should be based, no allowance can be made for her support pending the action or for suit money,⁶⁵ unless it be authorized by a statute.⁶⁶ On the other hand, where the husband brings the suit and the wife defends, asserting the validity of the marriage, she is in position to claim alimony pendente lite and an allowance for the expenses of the suit and for counsel fees, and it will be granted to her on a proper showing.⁶⁷ But of course it is otherwise if the wife as defendant admits that the marriage was null and void.⁶⁸ Permanent alimony cannot be granted in cases of this kind, for if a decree is made in accordance with the prayer of the petition it must adjudge the pretended marriage void ab initio and consequently that the parties never sustained the relation of husband and wife.⁶⁹ But where the woman is of good character and blameless in the affair, even though the marriage is declared void, she may be entitled to receive a substantial allowance, not technically as alimony, but by way of compensation for the pecuniary benefits derived by the man during the supposed marriage relation.⁷⁰ And if the wife prevails in her contention that the marriage was valid and the court dismisses the husband's bill for annulment, an allowance may be made to her for her expenses and counsel fees beyond the taxable costs.⁷¹

property.⁷² So, in passing sentence of annulment, the court has power by statute in some states, and apparently at common law, to make an order for the restitution to the wife of the property which the husband received from her or of which he acquired possession by virtue of the marriage.⁷³ And in other cases where a party has been tricked or duped into a marriage and it is annulled, the court may order the restoration to him of his property fraudulently acquired and converted by the other party.⁷⁴ Also where the wife entered into the marriage in good faith and is free from blame and it is annulled for the fault of the husband, she may be allowed substantial compensation for the benefits which he received or the loss which she suffered in consequence of the marriage.⁷⁵

b. Operation and Effect. A decree annulling a marriage is final and conclusive and not open to collateral impeachment,⁷⁶ although it may be vacated or set

Enforcement of order.—In Iowa an order of this kind for the restoration of plaintiff's property on the annulment of a marriage may be enforced by an attachment against defendant's property. Daniels v. Morris, 54 Iowa 369, 6 N. W. 532. But in Washington, where the statute authorizes the court in granting a divorce to dispose of the property of the parties but makes no provision as to enforcing its decree by attachment, the court has no power to enforce by attachment and imprisonment as for contempt an order requiring defendant to pay into court money of plaintiff fraudulently acquired and converted by him. In re Van Alstine, 21 Wash. 194, 57 Pac. 348.

The power of inquiring into and varying settlements after a decree of nullity vested in the court by the provisions of Matrimonial Causes Act (1859), § 5, as extended by Matrimonial Causes Act (1878), § 3, applies equally to all cases of nullity, and the jurisdiction of the court is not affected by the fact that the decree has been pronounced on the ground of respondent's impotence. Dormer v. Ward, [1901] P. 20, 69 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 144, 83 L. T. Rep. N. S. 556, 49 Wkly. Rep. 149 [affirming [1900] P. 130]. See also Attwood v. Attwood, [1903] P. 7, 71 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 129, 87 L. T. 76. Steimer v. Steimer, 37 Misc. (N. Y.) 26, 74 N. Y. Suppl. 714, where, however, it is held that a decree of nullity may be attacked by the wife's mother as an amicus curiæ, the wife being an infant, on the ground that it was procured by collusion between the infant and her husband. Compare Harrison v. Southampton, 4 De G. M. & G. 137, 18 Jur. 1, 22 L. J. Ch. 722, 1 Wkly. Rep. 422, 53 Eng. Ch. 108, 43 Eng. Reprint 459.

Effect of ecclesiastical decree of nullity.—In Quebec it has been held that, notwithstanding the ecclesiastical decree declaring a marriage invalid for relationship in the fourth degree, civil obligations continue until the judgment of the civil court declaring the marriage void is pronounced. Consequently, pending the action, the consorts continue to be regarded as such for their civil obligations; the community established by the marriage contract continues in existence; and the husband (plaintiff) continues liable to furnish maintenance to his wife (defendant). A child being born of the marriage after the canonical decree, and although the consorts have ceased cohabitation, such child being only a few months old, the wife (defendant), who has by nature its custody and care in her own right and without being appointed tutrix, may obtain from her husband, pending the action, provision for the child and for necessities. The wife has also a right to obtain from plaintiff, head of the community provided for in the marriage contract, the means of paying the costs of her defense when it is taken in good faith. It is for plaintiff as head of the community to provide for payment of all costs, as well those of the demand as those of the legitimate defense of the action to have the marriage annulled as a necessary result of the canonical decree of nullity made at his instance; and the costs of the defense are charged on the community. Levesque v. Ouellet, 22 Quebec Super. Ct. 181.

aside for good cause on a proper application.⁷⁷ Its effect is to make the supposed or pretended marriage as if it had never existed, and hence it restores both parties to their former status and to all rights of property as before the marriage.⁷⁸ Hence also its effect is to make any children of the marriage illegitimate,⁷⁹ unless their legitimacy is saved by a statute, as is now the case in several states.⁸⁰

10. REVIEW.⁸¹ A judgment or decree annulling a marriage may be reviewed on error or appeal as in other cases.⁸² But if the evidence on which it was based was disputed or conflicting, the appellate court will not be inclined to disturb the decision.⁸³

IX. JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE.

Jactitation of marriage arises where one person, not being married to another, pretends that a marriage exists between them and proclaims it to others.⁸⁴ It is a subject of legal redress, the person against whom the marriage is thus falsely set up being entitled to a decree enjoining the offender to abstain from the false boasting.⁸⁵ Cases of this nature seem never to have arisen in America, and but rarely in Great Britain.⁸⁶ A jactitation suit has been said to be in the nature of a criminal proceeding,⁸⁷ and to have something in common with proceedings for defamation.⁸⁸ The suit can be instituted only by the party with whom the marriage is falsely pretended to exist.⁸⁹ To a charge of jactitation three different defenses may be opposed: (1) Respondent may deny the boasting.⁹⁰ (2) He may admit the boasting and allege that his pretensions are true because a marriage does in fact exist.⁹¹ (3) He may admit the false boasting, and justify on the ground

It is, therefore, a fit subject of legal redress; and this redress is to be obtained, by charging the supposed offender, with having falsely and maliciously boasted of a matrimonial connexion, and upon proof of the fact, obtaining a sentence, enjoining him, or her, to abstain in future from such false and injurious representations, and punishing the past offence by a condemnation in the costs of the proceeding." that it was authorized by complainant either expressly or by acquiescence.⁹² If no defense is interposed the case is not triable by a jury.⁹³ On a decree against respondent he is chargeable with costs.⁹⁴ It has been held that a decree for complainant in a jactitation cause is conclusive of the fact that the parties were not married.⁹⁵

X. RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS.

A. Right of Action and Defenses. In Great Britain,⁹⁶ but not in the United States,⁹⁷ if one spouse wrongfully subtracts or withholds conjugal rights from the other by living separate and apart without just cause, he or she may be compelled at the suit of the latter to renew cohabitation. This compulsory resumption of cohabitation is known as restitution of conjugal rights.⁹⁸ The right which the courts interfere to protect in these cases is that of marital cohabitation, and consequently if the parties are living together the suit does not lie;⁹⁹ nor will restitution be decreed where the parties are living apart under a separation deed in which petitioner has covenanted not to seek to compel cohabitation.¹ As a rule nothing

(where it is said: "In that state of things, the proceeding assumes another shape, that of a suit of nullity, and of restitution of conjugal rights, on an inquiry into the fact and validity of such asserted marriage; and it will depend upon the result of that inquiry, whether the party has falsely pretended, or truly asserted such a marriage. In the former case, the Court would pronounce a sentence of nullity, and enjoin silence in future. In the latter, the Court would enjoin the accuser to return to matrimonial cohabitation, unless it could be shown, that some other reason was interposed to dissolve that obligation"); Walton v. Rider, 1 Lee Eccl. 16; Bodkin v. Case, Milw. 356.

In the absence of such a covenant the separation deed is no defense. Spering v. Spering, 32 L. J. P. & M. 116, 9 L. T. Rep. N. S. 24, 3 Swab. & Tr. 211, 11 Wkly. Rep. 810. And see *Anquez v. Estoppel to attack deed.—By a deed of separation between the husband, the wife, and a trustee, containing a recital that the husband and wife had agreed to live separate, the husband covenanted with the trustee to pay the wife £25 a year till their only child should attain twenty-one or die under that age or become chargeable to the husband, and to allow her to enjoy all her present and future property for her separate use, and the trustee covenanted with the husband to indemnify him against the debts of the wife, and that the wife should not take any proceedings to compel him to live with her. The annuity was paid until the child died, a minor. The wife after this presented her petition for the restitution of conjugal rights, and the husband pleaded the separation deed. It was held that the recital of the agreement to live separate, being contained in a deed to can be pleaded in bar to a suit for restitution but what would entitle respondent to a judicial separation;² but it seems that in cases where misconduct of petitioner has led to desertion by respondent and has amounted to sufficient cause to disentitle petitioner to maintain a suit for judicial separation on the ground of desertion, the court is empowered to refuse restitution of conjugal rights, although such misconduct may not be sufficiently grave to enable respondent to obtain a judicial separation.³ Any misconduct on the part of petitioner that would entitle respondent to a judicial separation is sufficient to bar a suit for restitution of conjugal rights.⁴

B. Jurisdiction, Proceedings, and Relief.⁵ Originally the jurisdiction to decree restitution of conjugal rights resided in the ecclesiastical courts,⁶ but in England this jurisdiction is now vested in the probate and divorce division of the high court of justice.⁷ The courts of England cannot entertain a suit for restitu-which the wife was a party, was evidence of a contract by her to allow her husband to live separate from her, and that after accepting benefits under the deed, she could not be heard to say that she had not contracted because the covenant not to sue was entered into only by the trustee and not by her. Clark v. Clark, 10 P. D. 188, 49 J. P. 516, 54 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 57, 52 L. T. Rep. N. S. 234, 33 Wkly. Rep. 405.

Effect of breach of covenant by respondent.—If the deed contains covenants on respondent's part and he has failed to fulfil them he cannot avail himself of petitioner's covenant not to sue for restitution of conjugal rights. Tress v. Tress, 12 P. D. 128, 51 J. P. 504, 56 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 93, 57 L. T. Rep. N. S. 501, 35 Wkly. Rep. 672. But it is not every breach of covenant in the deed which will prevent the party committing it from setting up the deed in answer to the suit. To have this effect the breach must be substantial, serious, and deliberate. Besant v. Wood, 12 Ch. D. 605, 48 L. J. Ch. 497, 40 L. T. Rep. N. S. 445; Kunski v. Kunski, 68 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 18.

Antenuptial incontinence of the wife is no defense to her suit for restitution. Mason v. Mason, 61 L. T. Rep. N. S. 304.

Bad faith of petitioner.—Unless a respondent can establish a legal defense, petitioner is entitled to a decree, and the court has no discretion to inquire into his sincerity in bringing the suit. Scott v. Scott, 34 L. J. P. & M. 23, 13 L. T. Rep. N. S. 211, 4 Swab. & Tr. 113.

tion of conjugal rights instituted against a husband who is not domiciled there; nor could the supreme court of Bombay, on its ecclesiastical side, decree restitution of conjugal rights as between a husband and wife who were Parsees professing the religion of that sect.⁹ A written demand for resumption of cohabitation is a condition precedent to the right to institute a suit for restitution.¹⁰ The court will not dismiss a petition for restitution solely on the ground of delay in presenting the petition.¹¹ Substituted service of process may be allowed in a proper case,¹² and where a respondent is a domiciled Englishman, he may be served with any proceeding in such suit anywhere outside of the jurisdiction of the court.¹³ A prayer for restitution cannot, in a suit for dissolution of marriage, be added to an answer alleging desertion.¹⁴ Defenses should be pleaded with particularity,¹⁵ and an answer denying that respondent withdrew from cohabitation

Rep. 656, holding that before a citation is permitted to issue, the court must be satisfied by affidavit that a written demand for cohabitation and restitution of conjugal rights has previously been made by petitioner on the party to be cited.

The demand need not be made by petitioner himself; and therefore where it is made by petitioner's solicitor at petitioner's request it is sufficient. Field v. Field, 14 P. D. 26, 58 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 21, 59 L. T. Rep. N. S. 880, 37 Wkly. Rep. 134.

Sufficiency of demand.—The preliminary letter which must be sent by petitioner to respondent demanding a resumption of cohabitation before a suit for restitution can be brought must be of a friendly and conciliatory character. Field v. Field, 14 P. D. 26, 58 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 21, 59 L. T. Rep. N. S. 880, 51 Wkly. Rep. 134; Elliott v. Elliott, 85 L. T. Rep. N. S. 648. Therefore where there had been no previous friendly negotiations on the subject, a demand for the restitution of conjugal rights couched in the form of a formal lawyer's letter is not sufficient. Field v. Field, supra. The demand need not, however, be of an affectionate nature, and if the request is clear the court will not inquire too closely into the peremptory character or the precise words used. Elliott v. Elliott, supra. Accordingly where a wife, after eleven years' separation and before filing the petition, addressed a letter to her husband expressing a desire to return to cohabitation, and demanding restitution of conjugal rights, and threatening to commence legal proceedings in case of refusal, the letter was a sufficient demand. Smith v. Smith, 15 P. D. 47, 59 L. J. P. D. & Adm. 9, 62 L. T. Rep. N. S. 237, 38 Wkly. Rep. 276. And where, prior to the institution of any proceedings, friendly and conciliatory applications were made by a wife to her husband, and a letter was subsequently written by her solicitors asking him to take her back and threatening proceedings in case of his refusal, and that letter was followed by a formal and peremptory demand in writing by the wife upon his non-compliance with those requests for cohabitation, these demands were sufficient. Mason v. Mason, 61 L. T. Rep. N. S. 304.

Mode of serving demand.—If the guilty spouse's whereabouts are unknown and cannot be ascertained, the court may authorize the demand to be served on his solicitor. Matter of Tucker, [1897] P. 83, 66 L. without just cause should state the cause of withdrawal.¹⁶ If a separation deed containing a covenant not to sue for restitution is relied on it must be alleged as a defense.¹⁷ The court cannot, on demurrer, reject an answer which contains only facts which apparently do not constitute a case of legal cruelty;¹⁸ and it is the practice of the court not to strike out a pleading where a reasonable doubt exists as to the legal effect of the allegation therein contained and where the legal effect could properly be discussed after all the facts had been elicited at the trial.¹⁹ The pleadings may be amended as in other cases.²⁰ Where the husband in his answer states his willingness to take his wife home, the court will not give directions as to the mode of trial, but will order the matter to be adjourned into chambers, and require the husband to file an affidavit in support of the answer.²¹ The court has power to hear suits for restitution in camera.²² If the cause is heard out of its turn without notice to respondent, a default decree for restitution will be set aside.²³ When the wife pleads the impotence of her husband, the court will, on her application, appoint medical inspectors to examine her.²⁴ The court has no jurisdiction to make a decree until the marriage has been formally proved, although respondent may have filed an answer not taking issue on the marriage.²⁵ A decree will not be granted in an undefended suit on mere proof of the marriage;²⁶ but where no answer is filed the court may allow the petition to be proved by affidavit.²⁷ The decree of restitution cannot be enforced by attachment and imprisonment of respondent;²⁸ but if respondent whether husband or wife, fails to comply with the decree after the expiration of a reasonable time after service thereof,²⁹ the court may make a settlement or allow

Enforcement of order.—A husband obtained a decree for restitution which was not complied with, and the court afterward made an order giving petitioner the custody of the only child of the marriage. A copy of the order for custody was left at the house where respondent was residing, but respondent had not given up the child to petitioner. The court, being satisfied that the order as to the custody of the child had come to the knowledge of respondent, ordered a writ of sequestration to issue against her for non-compliance with the order, without a previous writ of attachment, and ordered respondent to pay the costs of the motion. *Allen v. I. NATURE OF DOCTRINE.

The doctrine of marshaling assets and securities is that where a creditor has a lien on two funds in the hands of the same debtor, and another creditor has a lien on one of them only, equity, on the application of the latter, will compel the former

The principle upon which this arrangement is made is not deduced from that which may properly be considered as the contract between debtor and creditor, but is founded on a natural and moral equity that it shall not depend upon the will or caprice of one creditor who has within his reach a double fund to disappoint another creditor of his satisfaction. *Ross v. constitutes the main ground for equitable interference.⁶ Accordingly equity will not interfere where the party invoking the doctrine has a complete remedy at law.⁷

B. Not Enforced to Defeat Equities — 1. OF PARAMOUNT CREDITOR. The doctrine of marshaling is never enforced where it will operate to suspend or put in peril the claim of the paramount creditor,⁸ or where the fund to be resorted to is one which may involve such creditor in litigation.⁹ Thus a creditor who has a lien on two funds, one within and the other beyond the jurisdiction of the court, cannot be compelled to go first into the other jurisdiction and pursue his remedy there,¹⁰ except in rare cases in which it is clear that the creditor having the two funds will sustain no loss in delay or additional expense if required to resort first to the fund without the jurisdiction.¹¹ Nor can such paramount creditor be compelled to exhaust, in the first instance, a mere personal remedy.¹²

2. OF COMMON DEBTOR. Moreover, the application of the doctrine of marshaling is attended with the further qualification that no injustice be done the common debtor.¹³

3. OF THIRD PERSONS. The equity to marshal assets, it is held, is not one which fastens itself upon the situation at the time the successive securities are taken up, but on the contrary is one to be determined at the time the marshaling is invoked. The equity can only become a fixed right by taking proper steps to have it enforced, and until this is done it is subject to displacement and defeat by subsequently acquired liens upon the funds.¹⁴ The doctrine will never be applied where it is injurious to a third party,¹⁵ over whom the party claiming the benefit of the principle has no superior equity;¹⁶ but the rule is otherwise where the third person injuriously affected has an inferior right or equity only.¹⁷

C. Property or Funds Affected—1. IN GENERAL. The operation of the principle of marshaling is not affected by the nature of the property which constitutes the double fund,¹⁸ but applies whenever a paramount creditor holds col-

However, an imperfect personal obligation, that is, one that cannot be enforced by suit, is lateral security, or can resort collaterally to other real or personal estate for the satisfaction of the debt.¹⁹

2. NECESSITY FOR TWO FUNDS. As a general rule, before the doctrine of marshaling assets will be applied, there must be two funds or properties, on both of which one party has a claim or lien, and on one only of which the other party has a claim or lien.²⁰ Accordingly equity will not interfere to marshal assets after a creditor who has his debt secured by two funds has in good faith appropriated in satisfaction of his claim one of the funds, since in such case there are not two funds left to be marshaled.²¹

3. FUNDS MUST BE IN HANDS OF COMMON DEBTOR. The rule of marshaling does not prevail except where both funds are in the hands of the common debtor of both creditors.²² In some jurisdictions, however, the rule is subject to the exception, that where independent equities exist, from which there arises a duty on the Security of small value.—On a bill to foreclose a mortgage given to secure advances, where complainant holds as collateral corporate shares of very small value, he will not be required, as against other creditors, first to exhaust his remedy against such shares, but will be allowed to transfer them in blank and deposit them in court. *U. the doctrine has been applied although the singly charged fund consisted of a homestead or exempt property.²⁵

5. EFFECT OF RELEASE OR LOSS OF ONE FUND — a. In General. Where a loss of the singly charged fund is occasioned by collusion of a creditor with the debtor, or by wilful or intentional neglect to preserve the fund, relief, if invoked in the proper time and manner, may be afforded to other creditors who have been injured thereby.²⁶ But to charge a senior creditor with a fund which was available to him and not to a junior creditor, the loss of the fund with which he is sought to be charged must have been by the wilful act of the senior creditor.²⁷ And the release of one of his securities by the paramount creditor only operates to postpone his claim to the extent of the value of the property released.²⁸ The lien of the paramount creditor will not be postponed where he releases one of his two liens before the junior creditor's rights attach to the other,²⁹ where the

However, the making of a declaration of homestead, subsequent to the creation of liens on the double fund, cannot affect the right of the junior creditor to compel the senior creditor to exhaust the singly charged fund. Abbott v. Powell, 1 Fed. Cas. No. 13, 6 Sawy. 91.

A debtor who voluntarily sells part of the mortgaged property, so that the remaining portion becomes the primary fund for the payment of the mortgage, has no equitable right, as against his grantee, to invoke marshaling to preserve his homestead. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Stanton, 55 Minn. 211, 56 N. W. 821, 43 Am. St. Rep. 491.

In Wisconsin, where the contrary rule formerly obtained (White v. Polleys, 20 Wis. 503, 91 Am. Dec. 432), the rule as stated in the text is now statutory, and is enforced where the junior creditor's lien was acquired before the passage of the act as well as where it was acquired thereafter (Smith v. Wait, 39 Wis. 512; Hanson v. Edgar, 34 Wis. 653).

A first mortgagee who has released a part of the land subject to his mortgage, not included in the lien of a subsequent mortgage, cannot defeat the right of the subsequent mortgagee to priority over his lien on the part subject to both mortgages, by setting up the rights of another mortgagee of the part released, where such other mortgagee is not a party to the proceedings. *Deuster v. Negligent release.—After notice by the junior creditor of his intention to invoke the principle of marshaling, if the paramount creditor, through negligence, fails to realize on the fund singly charged, such negligence, unless it be wanton or amount to a constructive fraud, will not justify postponement of the permanent creditor's lien. *Ross v. value of the funds originally covered by the superior lien did not exceed the paramount creditor's claim,³⁰ or where the fund remaining is ample to secure both liens.³¹ So the principle can apply only when the creditor's right to resort to both funds is clear, and not seriously disputed, and when the remedies available for reaching and applying the funds are reasonably prompt and efficient.³²

b. Notice of Inferior Lien Necessary. In any case the prior encumbrancer is entitled to notice of the existence of the junior claim, and of the intention of the junior creditor to compel the former to make his election in compliance with this principle.³³

6. EFFECT OF GIVING ONE SECURITY IN EXONERATION OF ANOTHER. The doctrine of marshaling securities is not applied where one security was given and expressly declared to be in exoneration of another previously given, even though other interests might be involved in the later security and it should prove to be insufficient fully to protect them all.³⁴

D. Against Whom. The right to marshal assets is not a right of the inferior against the paramount creditor, but is a right against the debtor himself, to prevent his getting the fund singly charged free from both debts and throwing both creditors on the fund doubly charged,³⁵ and this right is enforceable against a creditor without a lien,⁴⁵ or a single creditor who is himself bound to the party entitled to the other security,⁴⁶ cannot maintain such a proceeding. So the rule is not applicable where the two claims are in the hands of the same person.⁴⁷

F. How Enforced — 1. BY BILL OR CROSS BILL IN EQUITY — a. In General.

One of the modes of enforcing the marshaling of assets is by a bill⁴⁸ or a cross bill in equity⁴⁹ to compel the paramount creditor to exhaust his lien on the singly charged fund.

b. Jurisdiction. In marshaling assets in equity it is indispensable that all the parties in interest should be before the court, so that the decree shall be final and conclusive upon their rights,⁵⁰ or at least that the fund should be so before the court that the judgment may operate in rem.⁵¹

c. Parties. To a proceeding to marshal assets, by whomsoever filed, the common debtor himself is an indispensable party defendant.⁵² A creditor not made a party to a bill to marshal may be brought in as defendant to a cross bill.⁵³

d. Pleading.⁵⁴ A party claiming the benefit of marshaling must, it is held, allege such facts as entitle him thereto,⁵⁵ and especially that the fund to which the paramount creditor alone has recourse is adequate to satisfy his debt.⁵⁶ So it is held that the junior lienor must allege that he himself will receive a benefit from the proceeding, and that the senior lienor will not be materially prejudiced thereby, and that a failure to make such allegation will render the pleading demurrable.⁵⁷ On the other hand it has been asserted that so free and large is the equitable doc-

Dissolution of injunction.—Where a junior judgment creditor brings suit to enjoin a sale of lands under a prior mortgage, and to require the mortgagee to first apply personal property which is subject to the mortgage, and, on motion of the mortgagee, the injunction is dissolved as to the personalty, but the motion is overruled as to the realty, and plaintiff appeals from the order, thus preventing the application of the very remedy which he seeks in his complaint, it is proper to dissolve the injunction on the sale of the realty. Osburn v. Andre, 58 Miss. 609.

Appointment of receiver.—On a bill filed by a junior judgment creditor to enjoin a senior judgment creditor also holding collaterals securing the payment of his judgment from selling the debtor's property under his judgment, and to compel him to make his money out of the collaterals, it is not error for the court to appoint a receiver to make a sale for the best price of the collaterals, having a known market value, but it is error to make a disposition of the money, without answer or proof, upon bill and exhibits alone. Davis v. Walker, 51 Miss. 659.

trine that assets will in many cases be marshaled, provided the facts which move the court appear at any time during the progress of the trial, even though they have not been alleged in the pleadings.⁵⁸

e. Evidence.⁵⁹ In a proceeding to marshal assets, the burden of proof is on the party invoking the doctrine to prove facts entitling him to such relief.⁶⁰ The burden is on the party who seeks the benefit of a proceeding to marshal to show that the double fund is not adequate to satisfy the claims of both creditors,⁶¹ and that the senior lienor can realize his claim out of the fund to which he alone can resort.⁶² The burden is also upon plaintiff to show that the remedy to which it is proposed the paramount creditor shall resort is as certain, prompt, and efficient as that which he is required to forego.⁶³

2. BY SUBROGATION.⁶⁴ The junior creditor who has been affected by the election of the paramount creditor is usually protected by substitution or subrogation.⁶⁵ If a creditor who has a lien on two funds, on one of which another creditor has a junior lien, elects to take his whole amount out of the fund on which the junior creditor has a lien, the latter will be entitled to have the prior lien assigned to him.⁶⁶ Or as the rule is otherwise expressed, if a creditor having a choice of two funds should, contrary to equity, so exercise his legal rights as to exhaust that fund to which alone other creditors can resort, then those other creditors will be placed by a court of equity in his situation, so far as he has applied their fund to the satisfaction of his claim.⁶⁷ And the rule is the same where the parties are creditors of different debtors, where, as between the debtors, equity demands that one of them should discharge the debt in exoneration of the other.⁶⁸

3. NOT BY ACTION AT LAW. The doctrine of marshaling assets is a creature of equity and as a general rule has no application to an action at law.⁶⁹ But it is held that when an equitable defense is permitted at law, to which the rule of marshaling securities is a reply, the countervailing equity of plaintiff will be considered, as well as that of defendant.⁷⁰

G. Effect of Laches.⁷¹ The rule in regard to marshaling of assets does not apply to a case where a creditor, having originally, equally with all the other creditors, the right to proceed against the real as well as the personal estate of the debtor, loses by laches the right of recourse against the realty.⁷²

MARSHALSEA. See COURT OF MARSHALSEA.

MARTE SUO DECURRERE. A maxim meaning "To run by its own force."¹

MARTIAL LAW. See WAR.

MARTINMAS. There are two Martinmasses, one, the old Martinmas, which falls on November 11, and the other, the new Martinmas, which falls on November 23.²

MASH. To beat into a confused mass.³

MASON. One whose occupation is to lay bricks and stones, or to construct the walls of buildings, chimneys, or the like which consists of bricks and stones.⁴ (See, generally, BUILDERS AND ARCHITECTS; MECHANICS' LIENS.)

MASONIC LODGES. See ASSOCIATIONS; CHARITIES; MUTUAL BENEFIT INSURANCE.

MASONRY. A term which may include either brick or stone.⁵

MASON'S MEASURE. The term applied to a custom among stone masons and builders whereby stone masons are entitled to claim in the measurement of work done by them not only the actual solid contents of a wall or structure built by

I. DEFINITIONS.

A. Master.¹ He is to be deemed a master who has the superior choice, control, and direction of the servant, and whose will the servant represents, not merely in the ultimate result of the work, but in the details.²

B. Servant³—1. IN GENERAL. A servant has been defined to be: (1) A person employed to labor for the pleasure or interest of another; especially, in law, one employed to render service or assistance in some trade or vocation, but without authority to act as agent in place of his employer; an employee;⁴ and

1. Employer defined see 15 Cyc. 1034.

Independent contractor defined see infra, II, A, 4, a.

Vice-principal defined see infra, IV, G, 4, a, (vi).

Other definitions are: "One who not only prescribes the end, but directs, or at any time may direct, the means and methods of doing the work." Bailey v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 57 Vt. 252, 261, 52 Am. Rep. 129.

"One who not only prescribes to the workman the end of his work, but directs, or at any moment may direct, the means also, or, as it has been put, retains the power of controlling the work." Pollock Torts (4th ed.) 72 [quoted in Powers v. Massachusetts Homœopathic Hospital, 109 Fed. 294, 298, 47 C. C. A. 122, 65 L. R. A. 372].

"One who exercises personal authority over another, and that other is his servant." 1 Minor Inst. (3d ed.) c. 14, p. 179 [quoted in Ginter v. Shelton, 102 Va. 185, 188, 45 S. E. 892].

3. The correlative of "master" see Imperial Dict. [quoted in Lang v. Simmons, 64 Wis. 525, 530, 25 N. W. 650]; Worcester Dict. [quoted in Lang v. Simmons, supra].

Fellow servant defined see infra, IV, G, 3, a.

Distinguished from: Agent see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. Independent contractor see infra, II, A, 4.

The several classes of servants are [(1) slaves;] (2) menial servants; (3) apprentices; (4) laborers; (5) stewards, bailiffs, factors, agents, etc. Ginter v. Shelton, 102 Va. 185, 45 S. E. 892. The first sort of servants acknowledged by the laws of England are "menial servants," so called from being intra mœnia, or domestics. Another species of servants are called "apprentices," from apprendre, to learn. A third species of servants are laborers," who are only hired by the day or week, and do not live intra mœnia, as part of the family. There is yet a fourth species of servants, if they may be so called, being rather in a superior—a ministerial—capacity, such as stewards, factors, and bailiffs, whom, however, the law considers as servants pro tempore with regard to such of their acts as affect their master's or employer's property. Besides these four sorts of servants may be mentioned clerks and shopmen, who, however confidentially they may be employed, are servants in the eye of the law; merchant seamen; persons working in mills and factories, or mines and collieries. Lewis v. Fisher, 80 Md. 139, 30 Atl. 608, 45 Am. St. Rep. 327, 26 L. R. A. 278 [citing 1 Blackstone Comm. c. 14)].

Common-law distinction between menial and other servants repudiated see Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780 [disapproving Burgess v. Carpenter, 2 S. C. 7, 16 Am. Rep. 643]. "One who, for a valuable consideration, engages in the service of another, and undertakes to observe his directions in some lawful business." Central Coal, etc., Co. v. Grider, 115 Ky. 745, 755, 74 S. W. 1058, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 165.

"One who, for wages, serves his employer, following his direction in performing the work." Holmes v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., 49 La. Ann. 1465, 1469, 22 So. 403.

"One who is employed to perform an inferior and menial service." Epps v. Epps, 17 Ill. App. 196, 201.

"One who is employed to render personal service to his employer, otherwise than in the

(2) specifically, a person hired to assist in domestic matters, living within the employer's house, and making part of his family; hired help.⁵ The word "servant" in our legal nomenclature has a broad significance, and embraces all persons, of whatever rank or position, who are in the employ and subject to the direction or control of another in any department of labor or business. Indeed, it may in most cases be said to be synonymous with employee.⁶ However, the proper meaning to be given to the word in the particular case is frequently governed by the context or the intent with which it is employed.⁷

2. PUBLIC SERVANT. There are two classes of public servants — officers, or those whose functions appertain to the administration of government;⁸ and employees, or those whose employment is merely contracted.⁹

II. THE RELATION.¹⁰

A. Creation and Existence — 1. WHAT CONSTITUTES RELATION. The relation of master and servant exists whenever the employer retains the right to direct the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter, who is called his master." Hedge v. Williams, 131 Cal. 455, 459, 63 Pac. 721, 64 Pac. 106, 82 Am. St. Rep. 366; Murray v. Dwight, 161 N. Y. 301, 305, 55 N. E. 901, 902, 48 L. R. A. 673; Baldwin v. Abraham, 57 N. Y. App. Div. 67, 77, 67 N. Y. Suppl. 1079; Singer v. McDermott, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 738, 741 62 N. Y. Suppl. 1086.

"A person who performs for another any kind of service; in which sense the word would be equivalent to 'employee' or 'agent.'" Eppe v. Eppe, 17 Ill. App. 196, 201.

"One who serves" (Worcester Dict. [quoted in Lang v. Simmons, 64 Wis. 525, 530, 25 N. W. 650]), or attends, whether voluntarily or involuntarily, a person employed by another, and subject to his orders; one who exerts himself or herself or labors for the benefit of a master or employer." Century Dict. [quoted in Ginter v. Shelton, 102 Va. 185, 188, 45 S. E. 892], "or does service voluntarily or involuntarily; a person who is employed by another for menial offices or for other labor, and is subject to his command; a person who labors or exerts himself for the benefit of another, his master or employer; a subordinate helper." Webster Dict. [quoted in Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1, 18, 21 S. W. 907, 37 Am. St. Rep. 374].

6. Wood M. & S. § 1 [quoted in Hand v. Cole, 88 Tenn. 400, 404, 12 S. W. 922, 7 L. R. A. 96].

The term "servant" is very broad, and, if taken in its legal sense, would embrace all classes of persons retained, hired, or employed in the business of another. Matter of Miller, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 323, 327.

Employee defined see 15 Cyc. 1029.

Laborer defined see 24 Cyc. 810.

"Any person who works for another for a salary is a servant in the eye of the law." Frank v. Herold, 63 N. J. Eq. 443, 451, 52 Atl. 152.

A workman by the piece, who, by his industry and labor, gives the required shape to the material of his employer, and who has no interest in the work, and is not under a contract, is a servant and ordinary employee. The same is true of a laboring man who works by the job in unloading a car of coal under the direction and subject to the control of the employer. Holmes v. Tennessee Coal, etc., Co., 49 La. Ann. 1465, 22 So. 403.

2. PARTIES. As a general rule, every person of the full age of twenty-one years, and not under any legal disability, is capable of becoming either a master or a servant. But in order that a contract of hiring and service may be legally binding, it is necessary that, at the time such a contract is entered into, the party about to be hired should be free from any other engagement incompatible with that into which he is about to enter; in other words, he must be sui juris.¹²

such terms and conditions as the parties see fit to make, provided they are not illegal and do not contravene public policy.¹⁶ Where the consideration is tainted by no illegality, but some of the promises are illegal, the illegality of those which are bad does not communicate itself to or contaminate those which are good, except where, in consequence of some peculiarity in the contract, its parts are inseparable, or dependent upon one another.¹⁷

b. Construction—(1) IN GENERAL. Contracts of employment are subject to the same rules of construction as other contracts. In construing them regard is to be had to the intention of the parties, as shown by the terms of the contract, taking into consideration the circumstances surrounding its making, and the object had in view.¹⁸ Where there is no express contract between an employer and an employee, imposing on the latter a higher degree of skill, care, diligence, and quit service, on pain of forfeiture of wages due, may be express or implied. If the rule was read to him, and without objecting he entered the employment, the law implies assent. Diamond State Iron Co. v. Bell, 2 Marv. (Del.) 303, 43 Atl. 161.

Where a contract is made in view of well-established customs of the trade to which it relates, it is to be construed in the light of those customs. Estes v. Desnoyers Shoe Co., 155 Mo. 577, 56 S. W. 316.

The use of the term "general superintendent" in a written contract of employment does not render it so ambiguous as to make the contract void, since the parties must be deemed to have used the term in the sense in which it would be understood by those engaged in the same kind of business. Schaub v. Arc Welding Co., 123 Mich. 487, 82 N. W. 235.

A rule adopted several years after the employment of a conductor by a railroad com-attention in the discharge of the duties of the position he contracts to fill, only the ordinary and reasonable skill, care, diligence, and attention implied by law can be required of him. But if the employee contracts for a higher degree of skill, care, and diligence than the law implies, he cannot excuse himself from a failure to live up to his contract by merely showing that he performed the duties of his position with the ordinary and reasonable degree of skill, care, and diligence required of him by law. He must perform his duties with the degree and grade of service for which he contracts.¹⁹

(ii) CONTRACTS OF HIRE OR LEASE.²⁰ Whether in a given instance a contract is to be construed as a contract of employment or as a lease is to be determined by the terms of the contract itself, its object, and the intention of the parties as gathered from the circumstances surrounding the transaction.²¹

4. INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS AND THEIR EMPLOYEES²²—a. Who Are Independent Contractors. One who contracts to do a specific piece of work, furnishing his own assistants, and executing the work either entirely in accordance with his own ideas, or in accordance with a plan previously given to him by the person for whom the work is done, without being subject to the orders of the latter in respect to the details of the work, is an independent contractor, and not a servant.²³

b. Relation Between Employer and Contractor's Servants.²⁴ The relation of master and servant does not exist between an employer and the servants of an pany does not form part of the contract of employment. Cleveland, etc., R. Co. v. Jenkins, 174 Ill. 398, 51 N. E. 811, 66 Am. St. Rep. 296, 62 L. R. A. 922 [reversing 75 Ill. App. 17].

"An independent contractor is not, in any proper legal sense, a servant of his employer, but is one exercising an independent employment under a contract to do certain work by his own methods, without subjection to the control of his employer except as to the product or result of the work. . . . It has been said that the test is, who has the general control of the work? Who has the right to direct what shall be done, and how to do it?" Indiana Iron Co. v. Cray, 19 Ind. App. 565, 48 N. E. 803, 807. See also Moffet v. Koch, 106 La. 371, 31 So. 40; Faren v. Sellers, 39 La. Ann. 1011, 3 So. 363, 4 Am. St. Rep. 256; Eldred v. Mackie, 178 Mass. 1, 59 N. E. 673; Berger v. Mandel, 25 Misc. (N. Y.) 766, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 987.

A person employed by the day to do a piece of work, and allowed by the contract to adopt his own methods in performing it—the employer paying the expenses incurred, and looking to him for results only—is an independent contractor. Groesbeck v. Pinson, 21 Tex. Civ. App. 44, 50 S. W. 620.

Where right to direct is reserved to employer, the relation is that of master and servant. Moffet v. Koch, 106 La. 371, 31 So. 40. See also Andrews Bros. Co. v. Burns, 22 Ohio Cir. Ct. 437, 12 Ohio Cir. Dec. 305.

independent contractor, nor between an independent contractor and the servants of a subcontractor, and he is not responsible as master either to or for them.²⁵ If, however, the employer assumes control over the servant of an independent contractor and the work performed by him, the relation of master and servant exists,²⁶ and the mere fact of nominal employment by an independent contractor will not relieve the master of liability where the servant is in fact in his employ.²⁷

5. EVIDENCE OF EMPLOYMENT.²⁸ Whether or not the relation of master and servant exists in a given case is a question of fact, or of mixed law and fact, and is to be proved, as any other like question. Generally speaking, any evidence tending to prove or disprove the relationship is admissible, its weight and sufficiency being left to the jury under the instructions of the court.²⁹

Evidence held insufficient to show relation. Connecticut.—Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 71 Am. Dec. 63, to the effect that the payment of an employee by the day, or the control and supervision of the work by the employer, are not in themselves decisive of the existence of the relation; that "to get at the truth we must look further, and see if the person said to be a hired servant and agent is acting at the time for and in the place of his master, in accordance with and representing his master's will and not his own."

6. MODIFICATION OR RESCISSION OF CONTRACT.³⁰ It is competent for the parties to a contract of employment to change or modify the same, and thus by new conditions add to or qualify its terms,³¹ provided a sufficient consideration moves between them.³² But a contract of employment cannot be modified³³ or rescinded³⁴ unless by mutual consent, except, in the latter case, for a cause which would justify a discharge from, or abandonment of, service.³⁵ An employment terminable at any time is, however, subject to modification at any time by either party as a condition of its continuance,³⁶ and may even be split up so as to allow a recovery for one part of a continuous service and disallow it for another part.³⁷

7. COMMENCEMENT AND DURATION OF EMPLOYMENT³⁸ — a. In General. The commencement and duration of service under a contract of employment is controlled by the intention of the parties, as gathered from the terms of the contract, the circumstances surrounding the transaction, and the object had in view.³⁹

b. Presumption as to Commencement. Where no time is fixed in a contract of employment at which the person employed is to commence work, the presumption is that he is to commence either at once, or within a reasonable time.⁴⁰

c. Duration of General or Indefinite Hiring — (i) ENGLAND AND CANADA. In England and Canada, where no time is limited either expressly or by implication for the duration of a contract of hiring and service, the hiring is considered as a general hiring, and in point of law a hiring for a year, whatever the form of the contract or nature of the service to be rendered.⁴¹ Nevertheless, it has been held that the presumption that a general hiring is a hiring for a year may be rebutted by evidence of a custom with reference to which the parties contracted,⁴² by the terms of the contract itself, or the nature of the services to be rendered,⁴³ or by other presumptions rising out of the circumstances surrounding the transac-

Employment held conditional on the giving of satisfaction see Daveny v. Shattuck, 9 Daly (N. Y.) 66.

Rules as to notice.—A manufacturing company has a right to make reasonable rules and regulations for the government of its employees; and a rule that employees must "work a six days' notice when leaving the employ of this mill" is a reasonable one, and, when employees with a knowledge of this rule enter the service of the company, such rule becomes a part of the contract and is binding upon such employees. Willis v. Muscogee Mfg. Co., 120 Ga. 597, 48 S. E. 177.

40. Barnard v. Babbitt, 54 Ill. App. 62. Compare however Russell v. Slade, 12 Conn. 455, in which case it was held that the legal effect of an agreement for service during the term of one year is not that the services must commence at a reasonable time after the making of the agreement, but that the servant has a right to tender his services immediately.

(ii) UNITED STATES. In the United States a general or indefinite hiring is presumed to be a hiring at will,⁴⁶ in the absence of evidence of custom,⁴⁷ or of facts and circumstances showing a contrary intention on the part of the parties.⁴⁸ While it is generally held that the fact that a hiring at so much per day, week, month, quarter, or year raises no presumption that the hiring was for such a period, but only at the rate fixed for whatever time the party may serve,⁴⁹ yet the Control of intention.—"If the intention of the parties to a written contract be intelligible upon the face of the instrument, extrinsic proof of its meaning is inadmissible, and its construction is for the court alone.

Glacius v. Black, 67 N. Y. 563, 567; Norton v. Woodruff, 2 N. Y. 153, 156. But if its terms be so obscure or ambiguous as not to be understood without the aid of adventitious light, then evidence, not only of the surrounding circumstances, but of the acts and conversations of the parties, is competent to illustrate their intention; and upon such evidence the meaning of the instrument is for determination by the jury." Campbell v. Jimenes, 3 Misc. (N. Y.) 516, 517, 23 N. Y. Suppl. 333.

Absence of agreement of duration of service.—"Where a person is hired to serve another without any agreement as to the duration of the service, there is no inflexible rule of law as to the length of time the hiring is to continue. The question as to the length of time the hiring is to continue will be governed by the circumstances of each particular case. If one is hired to work in a crop being raised, the presumption is, in the absence of circumstances showing a contrary intention, that his term of service is to continue during the crop season. If one is hired to do general service on a farm, the presumption is, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary or circumstances showing a contrary intention, that the term of service is to continue for a year. The same rule applies to the hiring of persons to do service in any business that requires constant labor. As this rule is not inflexible, and may be controlled by circumstances, the circumstance of agreeing on weekly, monthly, quarterly or half-yearly payment of wages, may be sufficient of itself to create the presumption of a hiring for the corresponding period. But the circumstances of the hiring, though no time is expressly agreed upon, may show that it was to continue for a year, although the payment of the wages was to occur monthly." Smith v. Theobald, 86 Ky. 141, 146, 5 S. W. 394, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 449 [quoted with approval in Magarahan v. Wright, 83 Ga. 773, 777, 10 S. E. 584].

In the absence of other terms a contract of employment at a certain rate per month implies a hiring for one month at least. Great Northern Hotel Co. v. Leopold, 72 Ill. App. 108.

The reservation of wages payable monthly or weekly will not control the contract so as to destroy its entirety when the parties have expressly agreed for a specified term, as a year. But if the payment of monthly or weekly wages is the only circumstance from which a duration of the contract is to be inferred, it will be taken to be a hiring for a month or for a week. Beach v. Mullin, 34 N. J. L. 343.

also the time when his compensation shall become due, are not fixed by agreement, and the hiring and service continue without interruption or payment until duly terminated, the employment, in the absence of a general custom or usage, may be deemed continuous, and the statute of limitations will not begin to run against a claim for compensation until the services are ended.⁵²

8. RENEWAL OR CONTINUANCE OF EMPLOYMENT.⁵³ Where one enters into the service of another for a definite period, and continues in the employment after the expiration of that period, without any new contract, the presumption is that the employment is continued on the terms of the original contract;⁵⁴ and this presumption must prevail, unless there be a new agreement shown, or at least facts which are sufficient to rebut the legal presumption, and show that a different hiring was in fact intended by the parties.⁵⁵

9. ACTIONS FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT TO EMPLOY⁵⁶ — a. Right of Action. Where, at the time fixed for the commencement of services under a contract of employment, the employer repudiates the contract, the remedy of the employee is an action, not for wages, but to recover damages for the breach of the contract.⁵⁷

b. Accrual of Right. Where a binding contract of employment to commence at a future day is entered into, and before that day arrives the employer announces that he will not take the employee into his service, the latter may at once bring an action against him, and need not wait until the day for the commencement of his services shall have arrived.⁵⁸ It seems, however, that if the servant does not immediately bring suit, and becomes incapacitated to perform the services before the day of their proposed commencement, the master may rescind the contract without incurring any liability.⁵⁹

c. Conditions Precedent. Where an employee is ready and willing to perform the services contracted for, but the employer has repudiated the contract, the former need not thereafter tender his services or keep himself in readiness to perform. His only further duty is to use reasonable care and diligence in entering into other employment of the same kind, and thus to reduce the damages.⁶⁰

d. Defenses. Whatever would be a good reason for discharging a servant⁶¹ would be an equally good reason for refusing to take him into one's service, after having engaged to do so.⁶² But it is no defense to an action for breach of contract to employ that, at a time subsequent to the alleged contract, the master had employees enough, without plaintiff, to do all his business;⁶³ nor is it any answer to such an action that the servant has entered into a conspiracy to depart from the agreement, unless the conspiracy has been acted upon.⁶⁴

That the original contract was void under the statute of frauds does not defeat the presumption of renewal for another year. Hodge v. Newton, 14 Daly (N. Y.) 372, 13 N. Y. St. 139.

e. Pleading. The general rules of pleading in actions for breach of contract obtain in actions for breach of contracts of employment.⁶⁵

f. Evidence.⁶⁶ The unexplained fact that one is seen operating the machinery of a carrier has been held sufficient, in the absence of circumstances negating the conclusion, to justify the inference that such person is acting as a servant of the carrier.⁶⁷ And it has been held, in an action on a written contract of service for one year, with a right of renewal by plaintiff for another year, unless there should be given written notice of any cause of dissatisfaction, evidence of causes of dissatisfaction other than those alleged in the required notice is not admissible.⁶⁸ Evidence tending to prove plaintiff's discharge is properly admitted under a complaint alleging a refusal to furnish him with employment.⁶⁹

g. Damages. In an action for a breach of contract to employ the measure of recovery is the actual damages sustained by the servant by reason of such breach.⁷⁰

B. Statutory Regulation.⁷¹ It is held that in the exercise of its police Sufficiency of answer.—In an action for breach of contract for services, where the work mentioned in the correspondence which constituted the contract was not made certain, and no provision was made for the time of duration or manner of termination of the contract, an answer denying the contract, and setting out further correspondence tending to show that the parties did not regard it as complete, is not demurrable. Havens v. American F. Ins. Co., 11 Ind. App. 315, 39 N. E. 40.

Variance.—Where, in covenant, the declaration averred that on the day stipulated in the covenant plaintiff was ready, and tendered his services to defendant, it was held that this averment was not supported by evidence that on the day stipulated plaintiff was sick, and that defendant agreed to dispense with his services until he should recover, and that on a subsequent day he tendered his services, and that defendant refused to employ him. *Marks v. Liquidated damages.—Where a contract provided that the employer might cancel the contract at any time on giving the employee one week's notice, and paying one week's additional salary, and the employer refused to allow the employee to enter on the service, it was held that such refusal was, in contemplation of law, a termination of the contract under its provisions, and the employee's damages were, by its terms, liquidated at the amount of two weeks' salary. *Watson v. (II) PROVISIONS AS TO NOTICE. Where a contract of employment provides for its termination at any time, upon the giving of a stipulated notice, such provision must be complied with, and a discharge or abandonment without the required notice is unlawful.⁹¹ But a party claiming the benefit of a notice under the contract of employment must show compliance on his part with the terms of the contract,⁹² and the right to notice may be waived by a party, the question as to whether his acts constitute a waiver being ordinarily one of fact for the jury.⁹³ On the other hand, the giving of notice of termination by an employer after the abandonment of the service by the employee does not waive such previous breach of the contract, with an assent to the restoration of their previous relations.⁹⁴

Some of the cases hold that the employer is the sole judge of what is satisfactory or not;⁹⁵ others, that he must be in good faith dissatisfied, and that this presents a question of fact.⁹⁶ And this latter rule necessarily prevails where the contract expressly so provides.⁹⁷ Where the employment is continued after its expiration, a provision of the original contract that the servant should be retained during satisfaction does not attach to the reemployment, and give the master the right of removal at will.⁹⁸

e. Termination by Mutual Agreement.⁹⁹ Like any other contract, a contract of employment may be terminated by agreement of the parties, or by their consent, either express or implied;¹ and where one party declares that he will not perform

f. Change in Business of Master³—(i) IN GENERAL. Where a master disposes of or changes his business, and thereby becomes unable to perform his contract, the contract is terminated, and if not terminable at will the servant can recover for its breach.⁴ So where the master disposes of his business to another, without notifying the servant of the change, and the latter continues his services thereafter, the master is liable for the servant's wages, so long as he remains without notice.⁵ But in case of contracts terminable at will actual knowledge by the servant of the change of employers, however acquired, will release his employer.⁶

(ii) FORMATION OR DISSOLUTION OF PARTNERSHIP. Where, pending the term of service, the master enters into a partnership with another, and the servant, without any new contract, enters into the service of the firm, his contract with his original master is at an end.⁷ The weight of authority is to the effect that the death of a partner dissolves a contract of employment made by the firm.⁸

If a surviving partner retains a former employee to assist in winding up the affairs of the partnership without an express agree-

But where the dissolution is voluntary, and the business is not closed, but is continued in the same manner and at the same place, the dissolution does not terminate the contract of employment.⁹

g. Insolvency of Master or Appointment of Receiver. A contract of employment is not terminated by reason of the insolvency of the master;¹⁰ and the fact that an employer who has become insolvent notifies his employee that his services will be no longer required does not absolve him from his obligation to pay according to the terms of the agreement unless the employee assents thereto.¹¹ The appointment of a receiver has, however, been held to terminate a contract of employment.¹²

h. Death or Disability of Master.¹³ The death of the master during the term will terminate a contract of employment,¹⁴ unless the contract is capable of performance by his personal representative, in whose service the servant continues,¹⁵ or unless the contrary is stipulated by the terms of the contract.¹⁶ But a contract of employment for a definite term is not terminated by the master's becoming insane during the term, although the contract gives the master the option to terminate it at any time on payment of a certain amount.¹⁷

disability he is unable to perform his contract;²⁰ but where a master has wrongfully discharged his servant, he cannot treat the subsequent sickness of the servant while in the employment of another, for which he is not discharged by that other, as a cancellation of his own contract.²¹

j. Abandonment of Employment by Servant²²—(I) IN GENERAL. Where a servant refuses to serve or voluntarily abandons the service, whether with or without justifiable cause, the contract of employment is terminated.²³ The rights and liabilities of the parties arising out of the abandonment of the contract by the servant are fully treated elsewhere in this article.²⁴

(II) GROUNDS FOR ABANDONMENT. A servant is not justified in abandoning his contract before the expiration of the term, unless good and just causes exist therefor.²⁵ Generally speaking, any breach of the express or implied provisions of the contract of employment by the master, or any act or neglect on his part which is prejudicial to the safety, health, comfort, morals, or reputation of the servant, will be deemed a sufficient ground for abandonment.²⁶ Whether, in a

Rep. 495, where it was held that the neglect of the master to pay wages elsewhere than at his established place of business does not, in the absence of any demand and refusal, amount to such a violation of the contract as to justify an abandonment of it.

given case, the ground assigned for abandoning the employment is sufficient is usually a question of fact,²⁷ the burden of proving which is upon the servant.²⁸

2. DISCHARGE²⁹—a. In General—(i) WHAT CONSTITUTES. No set form of words is necessary to constitute a discharge; but any words or acts which show a clear intention on the part of the master to dispense with the servant's services, and which are equivalent to a declaration to the servant that his services will be no longer accepted, are sufficient.³⁰

(ii) *GROUND*S—(A) In General. Unless the contract of employment is terminable at will an employer cannot arbitrarily discharge his employee,³¹ but only Denial of servant's right under, and attempt to rescind, contract.—Hartman v. Rogers, 69 Cal. 643, 11 Pac. 581.

Restriction of servant's rights under contract.—Baldwin v. Marquize, 91 Ga. 404, 18 S. E. 309.

Wrongful assault by master on servant.—Matthews v. Terry, 10 Conn. 455; Erickson v. Sorby, 90 Minn. 327, 96 N. W. 791; Bishop v. Ranney, 59 Vt. 316, 7 Atl. 820. But compare Morgan v. Shelton, 28 La. Ann. 822, where an assault made in a quarrel unconnected with the contract of service was held not to justify an abandonment. And see Mather v. Brokaw, 43 N. J. L. 587, to the effect that an assault upon a servant's child, not residing upon the master's premises, by one not under the master's control, and not by his direction, knowledge, or consent, is not a good cause for abandoning his service.

Attempt upon a female servant's virtue by a member of another family living in the same house is good ground for abandoning the service, although it appears that her master had no control over the other family. Patterson v. Gage, 23 Vt. 558, 56 Am. Dec. 96.

for good cause.³² But as a general proposition any act of a servant which injures or has a tendency to injure his master's business, interests, or reputation will justify his dismissal.³³ Actual loss is, however, unnecessary, but it is sufficient if from the circumstances it appears that the master has been or is likely to be damaged by the act complained of.³⁴

that he is competent to discharge the duties for which he is employed, and a breach of such contract will warrant his discharge.³⁹ But the failure of a servant to perform his work in an absolutely skilful and satisfactory manner does not, in the absence of a special contract, authorize his discharge, but only failure to perform it in a reasonably skilful manner;⁴⁰ and where a master, in settlement of a claim for personal injuries, agrees to employ a man in a new capacity, he is bound to give him a reasonable opportunity to learn the business before discharging him for incompetency.⁴¹

though there has been no resulting loss;⁵⁴ but the better view seems to be that, to constitute just cause for the discharge of a servant, the disobedience must be in regard to matters of such importance in the conduct of the business as reasonably require obedience and fulfilment,⁵⁵ and that in such employments as involve a higher order of services, and some degree of discretion and judgment, it would be unauthorized and unreasonable to regard skilled mechanics or other employees as subject to the whim and caprice of their employers or as deprived of all right of action to such a degree as to be liable to lose their places upon every omission to obey orders, involving no serious consequences.⁵⁶ The courts will not permit juries to guess or speculate when from the undisputed evidence it is apparent that the order of the master was reasonable and that the servant was guilty of insubordination.⁵⁷ Where the fact of disobedience is in dispute it is of course a matter for the jury.⁵⁸

(3) INTOXICATION OR INTEMPERANCE. Independently of any agreement to that effect a master may discharge his servant when by intoxication he unfits himself for the full and proper discharge of his duties,⁵⁹ and he may discharge him even when he is not incapacitated thereby, if his intoxication is or may be prejudicial to the master's interests.⁶⁰

Rep. 712; Turner v. Kouwenhoven, 100 N. Y. 115, 2 N. E. 637], which was an action for wrongful discharge, in which it appeared that plaintiff was engaged for a long term of years as superintendent of a large and important business, and was constantly obliged to represent defendant in different states, and to attend with promptness, resoluteness, and good judgment to large pecuniary interests, and it was held proper to charge the jury that what would justify the discharge of a mere clerk or workman might not justify the discharge of one like plaintiff, and that where a contract has been substantially performed as to time and its most material parts, the employer has no right to dismiss an employee for mere disobedience of general orders of a slight character, which involve no serious consequences or danger to the business, unless such disobedience is perverse or unreasonable.

ment that inability from sickness or disease to perform the services on which the contract depends will be a sufficient excuse for non-performance on the part of either party, and will justify the master in terminating the relation.⁶¹ But a mere temporary absence which causes no injury to the master's business is not sufficient to warrant a servant's discharge.⁶²

(iii) CONDONATION OF BREACH OF CONTRACT AND EFFECT OF REPARATION. A master who, after knowledge⁶³ of a material breach of contract on the part of his servant, continues to accept his services, without reasonable cause for delay in discharging him,⁶⁴ is presumed to have waived the breach, and will not be allowed to set it up afterward;⁶⁵ but such condonation can in no respect extend to subsequent offenses or to a continued deficiency.⁶⁶ But on the other hand subsequent misconduct may be considered in the light of the delinquencies waived;⁶⁷ and there was a single act of public drunkenness, accompanied by disorderly conduct, but which did not incapacitate the servant or cause him to fail in the performance of his work. See also Robinson v. Gleason, 9 N. J. L. J. 303, in which a servant employed by a hotel-keeper took two drinks at the bar on the invitation of two guests at eleven thirty o'clock P. M., when no one was present but the barkeeper, the guests, and himself, and it was held good cause for his discharge, although there was no rule prohibiting him from drinking at the bar.

the retention of a servant after knowledge of certain breaches of duty does not prevent their use as grounds of discharge when the offense is repeated.⁶⁸ Although a servant has fulfilled a stipulation to make reparation for his mistakes, these may justify his employer in rescinding the contract.⁶⁹

(iv) CAUSE FOR DISCHARGE AND STATEMENT THEREOF. The motives which actuate a master in discharging a servant are wholly immaterial, if any legal ground exists for such discharge;⁷⁰ and it is immaterial whether or not all or any of the grounds were known to the master when he discharged the servant.⁷¹ Neither is it necessary for him to assign a reason for the discharge;⁷² nor is he estopped to rely upon some other or different reason, whether known to him at the time of the discharge or not.⁷³ Manifestly a cause arising subsequently to the discharge cannot be urged in defense of an action for breach of contract of hiring.⁷⁴

(v) TESTIMONIALS AS TO CHARACTER. At common law no duty is imposed on an employer to give his employee a testimonial of character, letter of recommendation, or clearance card on the severance of the relation, in the absence of any custom or usage requiring it.⁷⁵ And unless restrained by contract, the master may suspend or discharge an employee at pleasure, with or without cause, and the fact that the employee's reputation is affected by unfavorable inferences drawn from the suspension or discharge itself will not render the employer liable in damages.⁷⁶ In order to support an action in respect of a character given by a master to a servant, it must be shown that the character was false, and also that it was maliciously given.⁷⁷ If, however, the person giving the character knows what he says to be untrue, that may deprive him of the protection given bona fide communications.⁷⁸

(vi) OPERATION AND EFFECT OF DISCHARGE. Upon his discharge, a servant must leave peaceably, whether or not the discharge was rightful⁷⁹ and vacate the house or premises occupied by him as servant.⁸⁰ If he fails to leave peaceably or after doing so returns, he becomes a trespasser, and may be ejected by the master,⁸¹ although his wages may not all have been paid.⁸² Under a contract allowing cancellation by giving a stipulated notice in writing, a discharge is equivalent to such notice as fixing the amount that can thereafter be recovered.⁸³

b. Actions For Wrongful Discharge⁸⁴ — (1) RIGHT OF ACTION AND CONDITION PRECEDENT.⁸⁵ Unless the contract of employment is for some definite time the servant has no right of action on being discharged;⁸⁶ nor where he is discharged under the terms of the contract.⁸⁷ If employed for a definite time the servant's right of action is dependent upon the wrongfulness of his discharge.⁸⁸ In an action for wrongful discharge, the servant must show his readiness and willingness to carry out the contract,⁸⁹ but an actual offer to perform or a demand for work is unnecessary.⁹⁰

Where plaintiff was discharged by an authorized agent, it was held that he was not bound to find defendant, inform him of his discharge, and demand a continuance in his employ. Gerardo v. Brush, 120 Mich. 405, 79 N. W. 646. Compare Collins v. Hazelton, 65 Mich. 220, 31 N. W. 843, in which it was held that an employee who claims wages under a yearly agreement made directly with his employer, and who, on being told by his employer's foreman that he was not wanted longer, but had better see their employer, goes away without informing his employer that he is ready to carry out his contract,

(II) ACCRUAL OF RIGHT. Where a master wrongfully discharges his servant before the expiration of his term the latter may sue immediately for the value of his services⁹¹ or bring an action for damages, either immediately or at the expiration of the term.⁹² But in those states in which the doctrine of "constructive service" obtains, an action for wages accruing after the discharge cannot be brought until the expiration of the term,⁹³ unless the contract is divisible, in which case an action may be brought for each instalment as it falls due.⁹⁴ If a servant is discharged during the term for just cause, he cannot maintain an action on the contract or on a quantum meruit, until the end of the term named therein.⁹⁵

(III) NATURE AND FORM OF REMEDY—(A) Contract or Tort. The remedy of a servant wrongfully discharged before the expiration of his term of service lies in contract, not in tort.⁹⁶

(B) Action For Wages—(1) WHERE WAGES ARE DUE. One employed to serve for a certain time and subsequently discharged for no fault of his own before the expiration of the term may recover by action the wages due or damages for the wrongful discharge.⁹⁷ It is held in some cases, however, that wages due cannot be recovered in an action for breach of contract, unless a count therefor is contained in the declaration;⁹⁸ and consequently a judgment in an action simply for breach of contract does not operate as a bar to a subsequent action for such wages.⁹⁹ is estopped by such neglect in an action to recover wages for the balance of the year.

(2) WAGES FOR UNEXPIRED TERM. It was formerly held in England that a servant wrongfully discharged might treat the contract as existing, and sue for his wages as they became due.¹ The doctrine of constructive service, as laid down in the early English cases, permitting a servant wrongfully discharged to sue on the contract for wages for the unexpired term,² was followed in the early cases in this country, and is still upheld by several courts.³ This doctrine has since been repudiated by the courts of England,⁴ and by many of the courts of this country. These authorities hold that if a servant be wrongfully discharged he has no action for wages, except for services past rendered. As far as any other claim on the contract is concerned, he must sue for the injury he has sustained by his discharge, in not being allowed to serve and earn the wages agreed on.⁵ In action for breach of contract. It is not permissible to split up a single cause of action into two or more suits.⁹

(D) Action For Breach of Contract. Instead of treating the contract as rescinded and suing on a quantum meruit, a servant who has been wrongfully discharged may treat the contract as continuing, notwithstanding its breach by the master, and sue for damages for the wrongful discharge, either immediately, at any time during, or at the expiration of, the term;¹⁰ and in some cases it has been held that a servant suing for a wrongful discharge must declare specially, the common counts not being sufficient.¹¹ Where an action has been brought for damages, no further action can be brought upon a quantum meruit,¹² nor can another action be brought for breach of the contract.¹³

(iv) DEFENSES.¹⁴ Where a sufficient cause exists for the discharge of a servant, although not the inducing motive to the discharge, or even known to the master,¹⁵ it will justify the discharge.¹⁶ So too a master may defend an action for wrongful discharge by showing that the discharge was by mistake, and that as soon as the mistake was discovered, and before the servant had sustained any damages, he offered to revoke, and insisted on revoking the discharge;¹⁷ by showing a voluntary resignation by the servant subsequent to his discharge;¹⁸ or by showing a reconciliation and return to service;¹⁹ and he may show by way of recoupment any loss of custom or other injury caused by the servant's conduct.²⁰ But it is no defense to such an action that the servant has had, or, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, might have had, other employment;²¹ whatever might be its effect as reducing damages;²² that the servant has rejected the master's offer to continue him in his service at a reduced rate;²³ that the servant has accepted employment by the master in another capacity;²⁴ that the servant has engaged in business for himself in competition with his master;²⁵ that after his discharge the servant has taken away customers, originally brought by him to his master under the terms of his contract, and carried them to his new employers;²⁶ that the servant, after his discharge, applied for and obtained a letter of recommendation, where he notifies the master that he claims under, and intends to enforce, his contract;²⁷ that a collateral agreement to refer disputes exists between the parties;²⁸ or that the master is insolvent and unable to continue his business.²⁹

(v) PLEADING—(A) *Declaration, Petition, or Complaint*³⁰—(1) IN GENERAL. Generally it may be said that the declaration, petition, or complaint in an action for wrongful discharge is sufficient if it contains all that it is necessary for plaintiff to prove under a plea of the general issue;³¹ and where a complaint

30. Form of complaint for breach of contract see Marx v. Miller, 134 Ala. 347, 32 So. 765.

31. Alabama.—Montgomery Mfg. Co. v. Thomas, 20 Ala. 473, to the effect that a alleges facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for damages for breach of contract, the fact that the prayer is for a judgment for wages instead of for damages does not render it fatally defective.³² On the other hand, where plaintiff sues upon the common count in assumpsit, without inserting a count upon the special contract, he can only recover for the time he has actually served.³³

(2) PARTICULAR AVERMENTS—(a) PERIOD OF HIRING. A declaration setting out a contract to pay a certain sum per year for services as long as a person shall remain in such services, and a readiness and willingness to continue, must plainly and directly allege that defendant agreed to retain plaintiff in his service for the period within which he is stated to have been dismissed.³⁴

(b) WRONGFUL DISCHARGE. In an action for damages the wrongful discharge must be averred as the breach of the contract, and as the fact constituting the cause of action.³⁵ A formal dismissal need not, however, be alleged or proved, an allegation of the denial and repudiation of the contract being sufficient.³⁶

(c) DATE OF DISCHARGE. In an action for damages for wrongful discharge the precise date of the discharge need not be alleged, as in such a case time is not of the essence of the claim.³⁷

(d) READINESS AND WILLINGNESS TO PERFORM. Where a servant, in an action for breach of contract of hiring, counts on the breach alone, not attempting to recover on the contract as such, an averment of readiness and willingness to perform is unnecessary.³⁸

(e) NON-PAYMENT. Where the declaration in an action for wrongful discharge claims damages in a specified amount, it need not contain an averment that plaintiff was not paid for the services rendered, the claim for damages being a sufficient allegation of that fact.³⁹ declaration for breach of a written contract, averring all the stipulations, is sufficient if it merely shows a wrongful discharge before the end of the contract period.

Texas.—Efron v. Clayton, (Civ. App. 1896) 35 S. W. 424 (complaint alleging that a certain sum was due for services performed, and that the servant was damaged to the amount of a certain further sum by the discharge, sufficiently pleads the latter damages); Tompkins v. Hart, 2 Tex. Unrep. Cas. 348 (when the damage claimed results prima facie as a matter of legal inference from the facts stated, the petition is always sufficient).

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 45.

A complaint to recover damages should show that plaintiff's claim is for that part of his services which he was prevented from performing by the wrongful discharge. Hartsell v. Masterson, 132 Ala. 275, 31 So. 616.

32. Williams v. Connors, 53 N. Y. App. Div. 599, 66 N. Y. Suppl. 11. See also Winkler v. Racine Wagon, etc., Co., 99 Wis. 184, 74 N. W. 793, where it was held that a complaint alleging a contract of employment for a certain time and a wrongful discharge before the expiration of the contract period substantially stated an action for breach of contract, although to show damages it avers that there is due the employee a certain sum by virtue of the contract.

33. Madden v. Porterfield, 53 N. C. 166.

A complaint is on a quantum meruit, and not for damages for breach of contract, where it alleges a contract of employment, the rendering of services and the expenditure of moneys in performance thereof, plaintiff's wrongful discharge, and the value of his services and expenditures, and prays judgment therefor, less receipts. 35. Saxonia Min., etc., Co. v. Cook, 7 Colo. 569, 4 Pac. 1111.

Sufficiency of allegation.—A complaint is sufficient on demurrer where it alleges that plaintiff was discharged "without any reasonable cause whatever." Foley v. Mial, etc., Pub. Co., 8 Misc. (N. Y.) 91, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 778.

36. East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Staub, 7 Lea (Tenn.) 397.

38. Marx v. Miller, 134 Ala. 347, 32 So. 765. But compare Williams v. Scott, 70 Ill. App. 51, where it was held that an averment of readiness to perform is not surplusage, nor variant with proof of efforts to find employment.

39. Spencer v. Trafford, 42 Md. 1.

(f) TIME OF ISSUING WRIT OR FILING DECLARATION. The fact that a declaration alleges that the term of service has expired, without making any reference to the time when it was filed or to the issuing of the writ, cannot prejudice the finding of the jury, where the proof is ample to show a good cause of action as stated by plaintiff.⁴⁰

(g) NEGATIVING DEFENSES. The declaration, petition, or complaint in an action for wrongful discharge need not negative matters of defense.⁴¹

(3) JOINDER OF COUNTS. Where a count for damages for breach of contract of employment and one on a quantum meruit for services rendered are joined, and a trial had, the evidence being sufficient to support either count, judgment should not be given for defendant, but plaintiff should be required to elect between the counts, or the jury directed to find a verdict on one only.⁴²

(4) AMENDMENT. Where a servant upon his discharge before the expiration of the term in an action on the contract files the common counts only, he may amend by filing a special count founded on the breach of the contract.⁴³

(B) Plea or Answer—(1) GENERAL ISSUE. By statute in some states, the general issue must be verified to have the effect of putting the making of the contract sued on in issue;⁴⁴ consequently, in a suit by a servant for a wrongful discharge, upon a contract in writing set out in the declaration in hæc verba, an unverified plea of the general issue does not put in issue the making of the contract by the master.⁴⁵

(2) INCONSISTENT DEFENSES. In many jurisdictions a defendant may, by statute, set up as many defenses as he may have, although inconsistent with one another.⁴⁶

(3) ARGUMENTATIVE DENIALS. An argumentative denial is bad;⁴⁷ and a plea which sets up a contract different from the one declared on is bad as amounting to the general issue. It is an argumentative, instead of a direct, denial of the contract.⁴⁸

(4) MATTER IN JUSTIFICATION — (a) IN GENERAL. In an action for breach of a contract of employment by reason of a wrongful discharge, evidence of facts justifying the discharge of the servant is inadmissible under a general denial;⁴⁹ nor is the mere denial of a wrongful discharge, without an allegation of facts justifying it, sufficient.⁵⁰ But where evidence of justification for the discharge of a servant is received without objection, it should be submitted to the jury, although not specially pleaded.⁵¹

(b) PLAINTIFF MAY DEMAND PARTICULARS. Where the defense to an action for wrongful discharge is misconduct generally, plaintiff is entitled to an order for particulars, showing the nature and character of the instances relied on by the master, and setting forth the dates and substantial facts and circumstances of all the instances and occasions wherein and whereon plaintiff miscondacted himself, on which defendant intends to rely;⁵² and leave should be given to supplement with further particulars, if discovered before trial.⁵³

(5) MATTER IN MITIGATION OF DAMAGES. In an action for breach of a contract of employment, that the servant earned or could, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, have earned a certain amount after his discharge, must be pleaded specially in mitigation of damages.⁵⁴ But where the complaint alleges that plaintiff, since the dismissal, has been unable to obtain steady or profitable employment, evidence as to his earnings in the meantime is admissible under a general denial.⁵⁵

(6) AMENDMENT. Where defendant in an action for wrongful discharge does not plead matters in justification, it is error to refuse to allow him to plead such matters by way of amendment, when objections are first interposed to evidence in justification.⁵⁶

(c) Issues, Proof, and Variance — (1) ISSUES AND PROOF — (a) UNDER DECLARATION ON SPECIAL CONTRACT. Where plaintiff in an action for wrongful discharge declares on a special contract, and undertakes to prove it, he cannot at the same time offer proof of the value of his services and recover on a quantum meruit, defendant having denied the making of any contract at all.⁵⁷

(b) UNDER PLEA OF JUSTIFICATION. Where a master discharges a servant for breach of duty, the issuable fact is not whether there was a breach of duty, but whether there was such a breach as constituted reasonable ground for terminating the contract.⁵⁸

(2) VARIANCE. A material variance between the allegations and proof in an

Where plaintiff alleges a wrongful discharge, which defendant denies, and the parties go to trial without objection to the state of the pleadings, it is manifestly error to exclude testimony showing misconduct of plaintiff a month prior to the discharge. Little v. Dougherty, 11 Colo. 103, 17 Pac. 292.

action for wrongful discharge is fatal,⁵⁹ but, since it is the duty of a wrongfully discharged servant to earn what he can after his discharge, an averment of readiness and willingness to perform subsequent to the discharge is not materially variant from proof of efforts to find employment,⁶⁰ or even from proof that he did find it.⁶¹

(VI) EVIDENCE—(A) Presumptions and Burden of Proof—(1) IN GENERAL. As in other actions, the burden of proof is generally upon the party holding the affirmative of the issue.⁶² In the first instance, the burden is on plaintiff to prove his contract and its performance up to the time of his discharge,⁶³ and where the contract of hiring is indefinite, the burden of showing the hiring to have been for a certain term rests on the servant.⁶⁴

(2) MATTERS OF JUSTIFICATION. Where a servant enters upon his duties and continues until he is dismissed he need not prove that he performed his services faithfully, as a presumption arises that such is the fact,⁶⁵ and the burden of proving a sufficient cause for his discharge is on the master.⁶⁶

(3) MATTERS IN MITIGATION OF DAMAGES. The measure of damages for the breach of a contract of employment by the employer is prima facie the sum stipulated to be paid for the services, and the burden of reducing the damages by proof that the servant has, or might, with reasonable diligence, have, obtained other remunerative employment after his discharge rests on the employer.⁶⁷

was not fixed by the contract, and plaintiff introduces evidence of the customary duration of similar contracts, defendant may show a custom of the business to cancel contracts on certain notice.⁷⁰ Evidence of the terms of a contract of employment between the master and servants other than plaintiff is not admissible in an action for wrongful discharge, in which the terms of the contract are in issue.⁷¹

(3) EVIDENCE OF PERFORMANCE. Any evidence tending to establish his cause of action is admissible on behalf of the servant,⁷² and where the master justifies, the servant may introduce any competent evidence in rebuttal of the defense,⁷³ or the improbability of a discharge without probable cause.⁷⁴

(4) EVIDENCE OF BREACH. In an action for wrongful discharge defendant has a right to introduce any competent evidence tending to show a breach of any express or implied condition of the contract of employment by plaintiff,⁷⁵ provided the proof is limited to the reasons for the discharge set forth in his plea or answer as a justification.⁷⁶ Although an employer cannot dismiss an employee for neglect or misconduct which he has condoned,⁷⁷ he may prove such former irregularities to show that the misconduct which led directly to the employee's dismissal was not a solitary instance.⁷⁸

(5) EVIDENCE OF OTHER EMPLOYMENT. In an action for wrongful discharge evidence is admissible on behalf of either party, on the question of damages, to show whether plaintiff has, or might have, obtained other remunerative⁷⁹ employment, with the exercise of reasonable diligence.⁸⁰ But it is not admissible where plaintiff, before his employment by defendant, had been employed by others to sell goods of a similar, but not identical, character with those he was employed to sell for defendant, to give evidence as to the amount of his average earnings while in the employ of such other firms, and as to the amount of his sales for them, for the purpose of showing prospective profits which he might have made under his contract with defendant but for the wrongful termination thereof.⁸¹

(c) Weight and Sufficiency. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence in an action for wrongful discharge is a question dependent upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case, and is one wholly for the determination of the jury, whose finding will not be disturbed unless manifestly erroneous.⁸²

(vii) DAMAGES⁸³—(A) In General. Although it has been broadly stated in many cases that a servant who has been wrongfully discharged before the expiration of the term is entitled to recover the stipulated wages, less what he may have received,⁸⁴ this is to be taken as merely the prima facie measure of his

That the services were not profitable to the master is immaterial where there is no evidence to show the servant's incompetency or unfaithfulness. Weber Gas, etc., Co. v. Bradford, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 543, 79 S. W. 46.

formed.⁸⁶ That the damages resulting from a wrongful discharge consist of profits lost will not prevent their recovery, if the evidence furnishes reasonable data upon which to compute them.⁸⁷ Where no specific wages have been agreed upon, the measure of damages is obtained by considering what is the usual rate of wages for the employment contracted for, and what time would be lost before a similar employment could be obtained.⁸⁸ Where, however, a servant's contract provides that he shall receive a stipulated sum, he is entitled to that sum for the unexpired term.⁸⁹

Where the contract was for permanent employment, and the servant had the option of continuing in it or not, a contention that merely nominal damages were recoverable for his wrongful discharge was held untenable. Daniell v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 184 Mass. 337, 68 N. E. 337 [following Carnig v. Carr, 167 Mass. 544, 46 N. E. 117, 57 Am. St. Rep. 488, 35 L. R. A. 512]. See also Johnson v. Walker, 155 Mass. 253, 29 N. (B) As Dependent on Time of Bringing Suit—(1) SUIT BROUGHT AFTER EXPIRATION OF TERM. Where an action for wrongful discharge is brought after the expiration of the term of service, the servant is entitled to full damages, which are prima facie the stipulated wages for the term.⁹⁰

(2) SUIT BROUGHT BEFORE EXPIRATION OF TERM⁹¹—(a) TRIAL BEFORE EXPIRATION OF TERM. There is a decided conflict of authority as to the damages recoverable where the action is tried before the expiration of the term. Some decisions hold that the damages are to be computed up to, but not after, the time of trial,⁹² while other cases of equally respectable authority hold that damages for the whole term are recoverable.⁹³

(b) TRIAL AFTER EXPIRATION OF TERM. Where a servant's action is brought before the expiration of the term of service, but the trial is had after the expiration of the term, damages may be awarded as though the suit had been brought after the expiration of the term.⁹⁴

(c) Where Contract Is Terminable on Notice. Where, by its terms or by custom, a contract of employment may be terminated at any time upon the giving of a specified notice, the damages for a wrongful discharge can be no more than the wages which would have accrued under the contract after the notice, had one been given.⁹⁵

by his employer. He was wrongfully discharged and it was held that he was entitled to receive twenty dollars per week for the unexpired term.

Prospective profits.—In a suit for breach of contract of employment for a year at a fixed commission with a certain advance per week, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to recover prospective profits which it was reasonably certain would have been realized but for defendant's default, although the amount was necessarily uncertain. *Roth v. (D) Evidence of Damage—(1) IN GENERAL. In an action for wrongful discharge the original contract is admissible in evidence, as showing the value of the services rendered,⁹⁶ and all relevant facts transpiring subsequently to the discharge may be considered in estimating the damages.⁹⁷ Where the servant is to be paid, wholly or in part, otherwise than in money, evidence is admissible to show the money value of the medium of payment;⁹⁸ and, in the case of a traveling salesman who is entitled to expenses on the road, it is permissible to show what such expenses would probably have been had the contract not been broken.⁹⁹ Under an agreement to pay an injured servant certain wages as long as his disability to do full work shall continue, the servant may, in an action for wrongful discharge, where it is shown that the injury is permanent, introduce evidence as to his expectancy of life.¹ Where the declaration contains no allegation of malice or of special damage beyond the loss of position and wages, the admission of evidence of special damage by loss of character is reversible error.²

(2) OTHER EMPLOYMENT IN MITIGATION OF DAMAGES—(a) IN GENERAL. A discharged servant cannot lie by unemployed for the remainder of his term, and then claim full compensation; he is bound to make the best use of his time, and seek other employment;³ and the master may show in mitigation of damages that the servant has received compensation, during the unexpired term of the contract, from other employment, or that he might have received compensation in other similar employment by using proper efforts.⁴ Prima facie the measure of dam-

Presumption as to wages obtained.—When, after his discharge, a servant obtains employment, the presumption is that he gets the best wages he can, unless it be shown by the adverse party, or otherwise, that he accepted less wages than he could have obtained. Hunt v. Crane, 33 Miss. 669, 69 Am. Dec. 381.

Only the amount earned can be credited, not the actual value of the services in the new employment. Toplitz v. Ullman, 20 N. Y. Suppl. 50. But compare Jones v. Jones, 2 Swan (Tenn.) 605.

Where the amount received exceeds that contracted for there can be no recovery. Laishley v. Goold Bicycle Co., 4 Ont. L. Rep. 350. See also St. Bernard v. Reig, 13 Ohio Cir. Ct. 540, 7 Ohio Cir. Dec. 539. Contra, Wilkinson v. Black, 80 Ala. 329; Armfield v. Nash, 31 Miss. 361.

Money earned after discharge out of working hours, and which the servant might have earned extra if he had been regularly employed, does not entitle defendant to an abatement of the damages. Allgeyer v. Rutherford, (Tex. Civ. App. 1898) 45 S. W. 628.

Refusal of less wages before discharge is no ground for reducing damages. People's Co-operative Assoc. v. Lloyd, 77 Ala. 387.

Where other employment cannot be obtained, the measure of damages is the stipulated wages for the unexpired term. Prichard v. Martin, 27 Miss. 305; Southwick v. Bernhard, 60 N. Y. Super. Ct. 493; Heim v. Wolf, 1 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 70; Byrd v. Boyd, 4 McCord (S. C.) 243, 17 Am. Dec. 740.

grade as that in which he had been employed,⁸ and he is not bound to accept employment in a different place,⁹ nor under a contract requiring his services for a period in excess of the unexpired term.¹⁰ But where an employee is offered the same or like employment to that for which he has been discharged for the same period and on the same terms, and before he has sustained any injury by reason of the discharge, he cannot recover any damages.¹¹ A servant is not entitled to recover his expenses in seeking other employment, in an action for wrongful discharge, although his earnings in such other employment are charged in reduction of his damages.¹²

(c) REEMPLOYMENT BY MASTER. A master may prove in mitigation of damages that he offered to give the discharged servant employment at the same compensation and in the same general line of business as that provided for by the contract.¹³ But a servant cannot be required to accept a new employment under circumstances which permit the claim that he consents to a modification of the contract, and an abandonment of his right of action, and ordinarily, acceptance of service in silence would at least give color to a claim that the contract was modified by consent, tacit, if not express.¹⁴ Nor is a servant who has been discharged

Accepting less remunerative employment.—Where a servant, after notice that he will be discharged on a certain day, succeeds in finding only a less remunerative employment, which he enters on the day of his discharge, his failure to seek other employment will not defeat his right to recover as for a wrongful discharge. Adams v. Fitzpatrick, 56 N. Y. Super. Ct. 580, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 181 [affirmed in 125 N. Y. 124, 26 N. E. 143].

(B) Sufficiency of Grounds For Discharge. What constitutes good and sufficient cause for the discharge of a servant is a question of law,¹⁹ and where the facts are undisputed, it is for the court to say whether the discharge was justified.²⁰ But where the facts are disputed it is for the jury to say upon all the evidence whether there were sufficient grounds to warrant the discharge.²¹

(c) Waiver or Condonation by Master. Whether by his conduct a master has waived or condoned a breach of contract which would justify the discharge of his servant is a question of fact for the jury.²²

(ix) INSTRUCTIONS. The general principles of law governing instructions in other actions for breach of contract are controlling in actions for wrongful discharge.²³

(x) APPEAL AND ERROR. On appeal from, or writ of error to, a judgment in an action for wrongful discharge, the judgment will not be reversed for harmless or non prejudicial error;²⁴ nor, where judgment is prayed for the amount agreed on as wages, and the defense is in bar, can a verdict for plaintiff for such amount be attacked for the first time on error, because the complaint failed to state that the breach was to plaintiff's damage in so much money.²⁵ Where the master fails to prove that the servant has been employed since his discharge, or that employment was offered him and refused, and the evidence is vague and indefinite as to the servant's earnings during that time, the judgment will not be reversed because no deduction was made.²⁶ Where plaintiff, who was employed for a definite term of years, the master having the right to terminate the contract at the end of the first year on paying him a stipulated sum, was discharged before the end of the year, and brought suit for such sum, expressly disclaiming any demand for loss of wages, which, however, was conceded by the master, on a reversal of plaintiff's judgment for the amount sued for, he is entitled to judgment on the master's admitted liability.²⁷

(xi) ATTORNEY'S FEES. An act providing for attorney's fees when an employee brings suit for wages owing under the terms of the contract of employment does not apply when the employee sues for damages for a wrongful discharge.²⁸

3. SERVICES OUTSIDE SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT. The construction of a contract for services as to the nature and extent of the services to be performed is governed by the rules applicable to contracts in general.³⁷ A person engaged as a superintendent, or in some leading capacity requiring more than ordinary skill, is not obliged to take an inferior position or to perform ordinary labor.³⁸ So one engaged for a particular position is not obliged to accept employment of an

Time for tender.—A demand for employment by one injured by a railway company which agreed to employ him in settlement of the injuries is sufficient where made as soon as he is able to work, although it is several years after the making of the promise. *East Line, etc., R. Construction of contract by parties.—Where one was employed generally to work around a sawmill, an agreement made when he was required to act as engineer that he was to receive higher wages while doing that work was a practical construction of the original contract as not including engineer's services. *Wilson v. entirely different kind.³⁹ Of course, if the contract expressly provides that the services are to be rendered in a certain state or states, the employee is not required to perform services in other states.⁴⁰

4. SUFFICIENCY OF PERFORMANCE—a. In General. Substantial rather than exact performance is all that is required in the case of any contract for services to entitle the person rendering the services to recover therefor.⁴¹ There is an implied obligation on the part of the servant to serve his master honestly and faithfully.⁴² But performance of services during all or a part of the time for which the servant is employed is not necessary, where the servant is ready and willing to perform during all of such time.⁴³ Where the contract calls for all the time of the employee, the usual custom in the line of business in which he is employed determines whether he is obliged to work on Sundays.⁴⁴ A servant is not required to work during unseasonable hours unless the contract and the nature of the employment makes it reasonable that he should do so.⁴⁵ The sufficiency of the performance is in no way affected by the acts of third persons rendering nugatory the services rendered.⁴⁶

b. Skill and Care Required.⁴⁷ One engaged to work for another impliedly contracts that he has a reasonable amount of skill in the employment, and engages to use it, with a reasonable amount of care;⁴⁸ in case of damage to the employer

As dependent on place of performance.—Where the contract is to do good work, the place where it is to be done is to be taken into arising from unskilfulness, the employee is liable therefor;⁴⁹ but if the servant has a reasonable amount of skill and uses due care, he is not liable for mere errors of judgment.⁵⁰ If the employee contracts for a higher degree of skill and diligence than the law implies, he cannot excuse himself for failure to perform his duties with the skill for which he contracted, by showing that he performed them with the ordinary degree of skill and diligence required by law.⁵¹

5. DUTY TO SERVE MASTER EXCLUSIVELY — a. In General.⁵² It has been said, independent of any particular provision in the contract therefor, that the master is entitled to the servant's exclusive services during the period of employment.⁵³ This statement, it is submitted, is too broad. For instance, if the work does not require the whole time of the employee, there is no breach of contract, where the employee devotes the balance of his time to a business not injurious to the interest of his employer, and not impairing the value of his services to the employer.⁵⁴ Even where there is an agreement to devote one's whole time to the service, such agreement must be reasonably construed.⁵⁵ While an employee must be loyal and faithful to the interest of his employer and cannot serve or acquire any private interest of his own in opposition thereto,⁵⁶ yet a contract to devote his whole time to the business of his employer does not prevent him from performing work for himself or others, of a different kind, and not conflicting with the work for his employer, outside of business hours.⁵⁷

b. Earnings of Employee From Third Persons. It is often stated that the earnings of a servant in the course of, or in connection with, his services, belong to the master;⁵⁸ but a contract to give all of one's time to his employer does not mean that outside earnings of the employee are to belong to the employer, espeaccount. Carter v. Adams, Wright (Ohio) 471.

"Where skill as well as care is required in performing the undertaking, if the party purport to have skill in the business, and he undertakes for hire, he is bound to the exercise of due and ordinary skill in the employment of his art or business about it, or, in other words, to perform in a workmanlike manner. In cases of this sort he must be understood to have engaged to use a degree of diligence and attention and skill adequate to the performance of his undertaking. Ordinary skill means that degree which men engaged in that particular art usually employ, not that which belongs to a few men only of extraordinary endowments and capacities." Baltimore Base Ball Club, etc., Co. v. Pickett, 78 Md. 375, 385, 28 Atl. 279, 44 Am. St. Rep. 304, 22 L. R. A. 690; Waugh v. Shunk, 20 Pa. St. 130.

Validity of contract.—A contract for the assignment of any improvements made by the employee in the employer's machines is a part of the contract of hiring, based on a good consideration. Hulse v. Bonsack Mach. Co., 65 Fed. 864, 13 C. C. A. 180.

Construction of agreement.—One employed in the manufacture of shellers and powers, who contracts to give the employer any improvements made, is not bound to assign his interest in an invention in check-rowers, although the employer added the manufacture of check-rowers to its other business and the employee used his time in perfecting his invention, by the consent of the employer, and with the assistance of other employees. Dice v. Joliet Mfg. Co., 11 Ill. App. 109 [affirmed in 105 Ill. 649].

Inventions after expiration of contract.—A contract to assign inventions made by the employee "while in his employ," which by its terms has expired, cannot be considered as existing afterward from the fact that it has been so treated by the employee, or from the fact that he has made oral statements that he was bound by it. Hopedale Mach. Co. v. Entwistle, 133 Mass. 443.

Compelling disclosure of discovery.—Where one is employed to make experiments in dyeing, the fruits of which were to be the property of his employer, and he discovered the process which he refused to disclose without special compensation, the employer was entitled to a decree for disclosure without further compensation. *Silver Spring Bleaching, etc., Co. v. benefit of his employer.⁶⁸ The employee may patent his inventions,⁶⁹ and the employer cannot compel an assignment of the patent to him,⁷⁰ although the employer may in certain cases have an irrevocable right to use such inventions.⁷¹

8. PROPERTY FOUND BY SERVANT. A servant who finds a lost chattel while engaged in work for his master is entitled thereto as against his master if the latter is not the owner.⁷² And a statute providing that everything that an employee acquires by virtue of his employment, except his compensation, belongs to the employer, does not apply to gold found on public land while grading a site for a mill, it not being found by virtue of the employment, since the employment was not to search for gold, but to excavate and throw away the earth removed.⁷³

9. COMPELLING PERFORMANCE — a. Order of Court. The rendition of services, or a return to service, cannot be compelled by an injunction,⁷⁴ or by an action for specific performance,⁷⁵ or in any other way by an order of court.⁷⁶

b. Corporal Punishment. A master has no right to inflict corporal punishment on his servant, even though a minor,⁷⁷ unless the power has been delegated to the master by the father of the infant.⁷⁸ Even moderate force cannot be used to compel a servant to obey reasonable commands.⁷⁹ Of course a master has greater power where the servant is an apprentice.⁸⁰

"The mere fact, outside of any specific contract, that the appellant was in the employment of appellee and received wages, and even used the material of appellee in the manufacture of his models, and even received assistance in making models, from the latter's employes, would not give it the property in the invention to the exclusion of the former. An invention is the product of the mind, and the making of models and performing of the experiments, are only mechanical operations, and mere labor performed for appellant under his direction, for which he would be liable to be charged, or the time lost deducted from his wages or time. As between employer and employee, the right to the invention belongs to the one who conceives the idea, and follows it out to practical invention." Dice v. Joliet Mfg. Co., 11 Ill. App. 109, 114 [affirmed in 105 Ill. 649].

An employer has a right to recipes for mixing colors, obtained by an employee by experiments in the course of his employment as a color mixer, and required to be entered in a book furnished by the employer for that purpose, and which are necessary for the manufacturing of the designs submitted to the employee and their subsequent reproduction. Dempsey v. Dobson, 174 Pa. St. 122, 130, 34 Atl. 459, 52 Am. St. Rep. 816, 32 L. R. A. 761. In this case, the court said: "The recipes prepared by the color mixer, for the use of his employers in the manufacture of their carpets, belong to them so far at least, as to give them the right to continue the use of the various colors and shades produced by them. The plaintiff had a right if he chose so to do, to preserve them for his own use in the future, but his right was not an exclusive one. It was his duty by virtue of his employment and by reason of the relation his work bore to his employer's business to enter all these recipes in his employer's color book; for none of the patterns of carpet manufactured during the twenty years of the plaintiff's service could be reproduced without the use of the same receipts, for the preparation of the colors to be employed, that had been used when the pattern was first produced."

b. Action For Negligence or Wrongful Act of Servant.⁸⁵ A servant is directly liable to his master for any damage occasioned by his negligence or misconduct in connection with his work,⁸⁶ whether such damage is direct to the property of the master, or arises from compensation which the master has been obliged to make to third persons for injuries sustained by them;⁸⁷ and this is so notwithstanding the negligence of another servant concurred in producing the injuries.⁸⁸ But a master cannot recover for faulty construction by a servant, if defects in the plans he has prescribed, and the tools he has furnished for the work, have contributed

An engineer of a tugboat is liable to his employer for any damage thereto by fire or otherwise which could be fairly attributable to any act done or omitted by him as a natural result or just consequence, even though not directly so attributable. Gilson v. Collins, 66 Ill. 136.

Imperfect equipment of train does not relieve the conductor from the exercise of due care in its management, so as to absolve him from liability to the company for his negligence. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Clanton, 59 Ala. 392, 31 Am. Rep. 15.

Consent of master.—A servant sued by a master for injury received by his animal while in the servant's use need not show an express leave to put the animal to that use. Hathaway v. Smith, 2 Tyler (Vt.) 248.

Burden of proof.—The burden is on the master to prove negligence, unskilfulness, or wilful misconduct on the part of a servant. Newton v. Pope, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 109.

Damages.—Where a mechanic injures the materials furnished him, or wastes them, he must account to his employer for the original value of the materials, less what they may be sold for for any purpose whatsoever, retained by the employer. Hillyard v. Crabtree, 11 Tex. 264, 62 Am. Dec. 475.

Subcontractors, not contracting with the owners of a building, but with the person with whom the owner agreed for the construction, are not liable to the owner in an action for negligently and unskilfully doing their work, by which the owner is injured. There is no privity of contract. The action must be brought against the principal contractor. Bissell v. Roden, 34 Mo. 63, 84 Am. Dec. 71.

to render the result faulty.⁸⁹ Subsequent payments to the employee, and continuing him in the employment, do not waive a claim for damages.⁹⁰

11. SUBSTITUTION OF PARTIES. Contracts for personal services are not assignable.⁹¹ It follows that a servant cannot, without the consent of his master, substitute another in his place to perform his services, irrespective of the ability or capacity of the substitute.⁹²

12. BREACH OF CONTRACT BY SERVANT AS CRIMINAL OFFENSE — a. Offenses.⁹³ While somewhat different in phraseology, the statutes in several states provide in effect that the obtaining of money or other property by entering into a contract of employment with intent to defraud the employer, and the refusal to perform with like intent, is punishable as a criminal offense.⁹⁴ There cannot be a conviction where the contract is void,⁹⁵ nor, in some states, unless the contract complies with the form required by statute for laborer's contracts.⁹⁶ Intent to defraud is an essential ingredient of the offense,⁹⁷ as is loss or damage to the employer;⁹⁸ but the intent to defraud is prima facie shown by proof of failure to perform the services or return the advances.⁹⁹ The offense is complete when the advances have been procured and the employee has failed to commence work on the day set, without lawful excuse.¹ It has been held that the statutes apply to a crop-per,² although the contrary has also been held.³

b. Indictment or Complaint.⁴ The indictment or complaint must set forth a contract certain as to its terms and duration,⁵ and of such a character as that described in the statute.⁶ It must also specify what the advances consisted of,⁷ and from whom obtained.⁸ But it is not necessary to allege a failure to pay for the advances where there is an averment of failure to return the money,⁹ nor is it necessary to allege that the term of service had expired before the indictment was preferred.¹⁰ Of course the proof must correspond with the accusation in regard to material matters.¹¹

B. Wages and Other Remuneration¹² — 1. RIGHT TO WAGES.¹³ The right to wages does not necessarily depend upon the performance of work,¹⁴ nor on the amount of wages being fixed by contract.¹⁵ It is immaterial, where the wages are fixed by contract, whether the employer derived profit or value from the services.¹⁶ On the other hand, if the right to payment depends upon the happening of a certain contingency which does not occur, no recovery can be had, however beneficial the services may have been.¹⁷ Wages may be recovered for a period of time prior to the commencement of work, where the contract so provides, since the subsequent service is a sufficient consideration.¹⁸ Whether work performed by one engaged for a particular investigation is within the scope of his employment, so as to entitle him to compensation therefor, depends upon the particular circumstances of each case.¹⁹ Where the right to compensation is by agreement primarily collectable only from the proceeds of certain property, there is no individual liability until such source is exhausted.²⁰ The person actually employing and agreeing to pay a servant is liable for his wages, notwithstanding a corporation received the benefit of his services.²¹ An agreement between the employers, a firm, as to who shall pay for certain services rendered by an employee, does not prevent a recovery by the employee from the firm.²²

2. STATUTORY REGULATIONS — a. Mining and Weighing of Coal.²³ To protect employees in coal mines, statutes have been passed in several states as to the payment of wages.²⁴ They usually provide for the mode of weighing the coal, the weight so determined to be the basis on which to compute the miners' wages.²⁵

Construction.—A statute providing that miners shall be paid for all coal mined, including egg, nut, pea, and slack, and such other grades as the coal may be divided into, at such prices as may be agreed on between the parties, does not prohibit a mine owner from contracting with his employee to pay only for lump coal screened from all the coal mined. Whitebreast Fuel Co. v. People, 175 Ill. 51, 51 N. E. 853.

In Illinois the 1883 statute requires operators of coal mines to furnish a track scale for weighing the coal and on which to base

Such statutes, being penal ones, the rule is that they are to be strictly construed.²⁶

b. Number of Hours of Service.²⁷ Where the statute fixes a maximum number of hours as constituting a day's labor, an employee who works in excess of such time is not entitled to extra compensation, in the absence of any special agreement in regard thereto,²⁸ except where the statute expressly provides that pro rata compensation shall be paid for extra time unless there is an express agreement to the contrary.²⁹ Where the statute provides that ten hours of actual labor shall be taken to be a day's work, and no objection was made that the employee did not the wages of the miners on the weight of the coal mined. This statute does not apply, however, where a contract exists between such operator and his employees for the payment of wages on a different basis, nor does it prevent the making of such contract. Jones v. People, 110 Ill. 590. The statute applies only to mines where the weight of the coal mined is to be taken as a basis of compensation to the miners; and hence a mine operator who paid his men by the day is not obliged to purchase a track scale. Reinecke v. People, 15 Ill. App. 241. It follows that, in an action for not providing a track scale, evidence that the miners had for several years been paid by the box for the coal mined, and did not want their wages based upon the weight, is admissible. Jones v. People, supra.

Under an Indiana statute requiring coal mined under contracts providing for payment by specified quantity to be weighed before being screened, and the full weight credited to the miner, provided that the payment for impurities loaded with or among the coal shall not thereby be compelled, a conviction for failure to weigh before screening was improper where the evidence for the prosecution showed that the coal mined was of such a nature that it was impossible to weigh the coal before screening, and credit the miner with the weight, without giving him credit for impurities among the coal. Martin v. State, 143 Ind. 545, 42 N. E. 911.

In Tennessee the statute providing for the appointment of a check weighman by miners, and that he shall not be "interfered with or intimidated by," the agent, owner, etc., is not violated by the president of a mining company notifying the miners that he will shut down the mine unless the miners discharge the check weighman hired by them. State v. Jenkins, 90 Tenn. 580, 18 S. W. 249. A weighman indicted for not weighing a certain load of coal cannot defend on the ground of a custom not to weigh a car containing more than twenty-five hundred pounds. *Smith v. Suppl. 500, holding, under a contract stipulating that an employee should receive a certain sum per day for each day he worked, and "proportionately thereto for parts of a day," that the latter phrase did not refer to extra compensation for overtime, but meant that, if plaintiff worked part of a day, he was to receive such proportion of his day's wages as the time he worked bore to a whole day; and that the employee was not entitled to recover compensation for work in excess of eight hours a day.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 81.

Statute making extra employment a misdemeanor.—In Utah, statutes make the employment of miners and persons in smelters for more than eight hours a day a misdemeanor, and it is held that the employee is impliedly forbidden to make such a contract, so that he cannot claim an express or implied contract to pay for services rendered in excess of eight hours a day. Short v. Bullion-Beck, etc., Min. Co., 20 Utah 20, 57 Pac. 720, 45 L. R. A. 603.

Construction of statutes.—The act of March 6, 1889, providing that eight hours shall constitute a legal day's work, but permitting overwork by agreement, for an extra compensation, applies only where the employment is by the day. Helphenstine v. Hartig, 5 Ind. App. 172, 31 N. E. 845.

In Michigan the statute provides that in all factories, work-shops, salt blocks, sawmills, logging and lumber camps, booms and drives, mines, or other places used for mechanical, work daily as much as ten hours, it is a question for the jury whether the work done in a day was by the understanding and implied agreement of the parties to be reckoned as a day's work.³⁰

c. Mode and Time of Payment — (i) CONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTES. The constitutionality of statutes regulating the time of payment of wages, and forbidding payment other than in lawful money or paper redeemable therein, is a question concerning which there is much conflict in the authorities.³¹

(ii) TIME OF PAYMENT. Statutes in many states require the payment of wages, by all or particular classes of employers, at least once a week,³² or every two weeks or semimonthly,³³ or once a month.³⁴ Statutes in other states provide manufacturing, or other purposes, within the state, where men or women are employed, ten hours per day shall constitute a legal day's work. It also provides that it shall not be construed to apply to domestic or farm laborers or other laborers who agree to work more than ten hours per day. If the employee works more than ten hours a day the employer must pay him for all extra time at the regular per diem rate unless there is an agreement to the contrary. It was held that the statute was not intended to apply to one employed as an expert in taking, finishing, or retouching photographs, nor to any service or employment where the hiring was by the week, the month, or the year. Schurr v. Savigny, 85 Mich. 144, 48 N. W. 547.

In Massachusetts, the effect of St. (1895) c. 438, relating to payment of wages weekly, is to make persons and partnerships engaged in any manufacturing business, and having more than twenty-five employees, subject to the general provisions of St. (1894) c. 508, § 51, concerning manufacturing corporations, except that the special provision of that section concerning municipal corporations not cities, and concerning counties, coöperative corporations or associations, and railroad corporations, are not applicable to such persons and partnerships. Com. v. Dunn, 170 Mass. 140, 49 N. E. 110.

Agreement for deduction of fines. — An agreement between a manufacturer and the employee that the weekly payment of wages shall be provisional, and that fines due for any week shall be deducted from the wages of the week following, is not repugnant to a statute requiring manufacturers to pay their employees weekly. Gallagher v. Hathaway Mfg. Co., 172 Mass. 230, 51 N. E. 1086.

A complaint in an action for a violation of a statute in relation to the weekly payment of wages, which fails to allege that the wages were due at the time when it is alleged defendant neglected to pay them is fatally defective. Com. v. Dunn, 170 Mass. 140, 49 N. E. 110.

33. See the statutes of the several states.

In Kentucky semimonthly payments are provided for in behalf of persons engaged in mining, and such statute is not unconstitutional. Com. v. Reinecke Coal Min. Co., 117 Ky. 885, 79 S. W. 287, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2027. An indictment alleging that defendant unlawfully and wilfully failed and refused on or about the fifteenth and thirtieth days of a certain month to pay to within fifteen days of the fifteenth and thirtieth the wages due a certain person employed by defendant, was sufficiently specific, and it was not necessary to allege that the employee whose wages it was alleged were not paid as required was present at the time his wages were payable, or, if absent, that he demanded them on his return. Com. v. Reinecke Coal Min. Co., supra.

In Pennsylvania the act of 1891 applies only to those engaged in mining or manufacturing. Com. v. Marsh, 3 Pa. Dist. 489; Bauer v. Reynolds, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 497; Com. v. Marsh, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 369. The act of May 23, 1887 (Pamphl. Laws 180), providing that certain employers shall pay their servants semimonthly, does not deprive the master of his right to set off against wages due a servant a claim held by him against the servant. Welliver v. Fox, 4 Pa. Dist. 197.

In Indiana a penalty of one dollar a day, together with reasonable attorney's fees, is imposed by statute after thirty days have elapsed after a demand for payment, but no penalty can be recovered which had not accrued at the commencement of the action. Terre Haute, etc., R. Co. v. Baker, 122 Ind. 433, 24 N. E. 83. The demand must be made by the employee, a demand by the assignee of the claim not being sufficient. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Glover, 159 Ind. 166, 62 N. E. 11. The complaint must aver facts showing the absence of a written contract to the contrary, which is made an exception by the statute. Toledo, etc., R. Co. v. Long, 160 Ind. 564, 67 N. E. 259. And the absence of such written contract to the contrary must be affirmatively shown. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Glover, supra.

Kentucky. — Under St. § 2739a, only such persons or companies engaged in the mining industry as are unable to pay their em-

a penalty for failure to pay the wages of a discharged employee on the day of his discharge.³⁵

(III) MEDIUM OF PAYMENT. In many states the statute forbids the payment of wages other than in lawful money or by an evidence of indebtedness payable in lawful money.³⁶ The purpose of these statutes is to protect the laborer, and it employees in lawful money at the time required by the statute are given fifteen days to execute due-bills, and therefore, where the employer is able to pay, an indictment against him for failing to do so may be returned before the expiration of the fifteen days. Com. v. Hillside Coal Co., 109 Ky. 47, 58 S. W. 441, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 559.

35. See the statutes of the several states.

Under the Arkansas statute fixing as a penalty for failure to pay employees on the day of their discharge, liability for their regular wages each day until paid, a servant may sue for such penalty independent of any action for actual damages, as where he has received his wages due up to the time of his discharge, before his action was commenced. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Pickett, 70 Ark. 226, 67 S. W. 870. The fact that the master paid the servant one day's wages after his discharge is proper to be considered by the jury, in an action under the statute to recover such penalty, as bearing on the question of his indebtedness for wages, although the master claims that the payment was merely to settle a dispute. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Pickett, supra. Such a statute, however, does not protect an employee neither employed nor discharged in the state, even though part of the services sued for were performed in the state. Louisiana, etc., R. Co. v. Phelps, 70 Ark. 17, 65 S. W. 709. Of course the employer is not subject to the penalty from the time of the discharge, where the amount due the employee is not immediately ascertainable, at least until the amount of wages due is ascertained or can be known by reasonable diligence. *Fordyce v. has been held that he cannot waive, by contract or otherwise, the protection afforded to him by the statute.³⁷ The statutes do not apply to time checks issued, not as payment for work but merely as a statement of account or an acknowledgment of the amount due,³⁸ nor to a check issued as a credit and not in payment.³⁹ So an order on a third person to pay a specified sum to a laborer is not an evidence of indebtedness for wages payable otherwise than in lawful money so as to be a violation of the statute.⁴⁰ In some states the statute provides that store orders are redeemable in money at their face value in the hands of the laborer or a bona fide holder.⁴¹ Where payment is made in money by an employer at the instance or with the authority of his employee to a third person on behalf of

Who is a bona fide holder.—One purchasing coal orders, which were issued by a corporation to its employees in payment of their wages, at a discount of fifteen per cent, in the open market, and in good faith, is a bona fide holder, and is entitled to recover their face value from the employer. *Harbison v. d. Deductions and Forfeitures. Statutes prohibiting deductions from the amount due as wages, on discharging an employee or on his abandonment of the contract, are in force in some of the states.⁴³ On the other hand statutes have been enacted in some states authorizing a forfeiture of the servant's wages where he leaves during the time for which he is employed.⁴⁴ The matter of fines for imperfections in the work is also regulated by statute in some states.⁴⁵

Discharge of railroad employee.—A statute requiring payment without deduction, on the discharge of a railroad employee, means without discount for paying in advance of the time fixed by the contract, and does not prevent the corporation from offsetting the damages sustained by the employee's failure to perform his contract. *Leep v. Forfeiture of wages on quitting without notice.—A statute providing that any person who shall withhold any part of the wages of an employee, because of an agreement requiring notice before leaving the employment, shall forfeit fifty dollars, does not apply to a contract of employment by which each party agrees to give the other two weeks' notice of intention to terminate it, and in default of such notice to forfeit or pay two weeks' wages. *Pierce v. 45. See the statutes of the several states.

A statute required the amount of fine for imperfections in work to be agreed upon between manufacturer and employee. It was held thereunder that a weaver may, by acquiescence in similar conduct, expressly agree, that where he is paid in full for one week's work, fines for imperfections in work of that week may be deducted from the succeeding week's wages. It was also held that where notices were posted in the shop specifying the wages to be paid for weaving, according to the quality thereof, and the employee acquiesced in the terms of the notice, that there was an agreement on the amount of the fine within the statute; and that an agreement to pay according to the quality of weaving was not invalid for failure to determine what constitutes first or second quality as designated in the rules, although the employee himself is unaware of the difference. The agreement does not cover cases where poor yarn makes the cloth of second quality so as to be repugnant to the statutory provision limiting an agreement for fines to fines for imperfections in the work. Gallagher v. Hathaway Mfg. Corp., 172 Mass. 230, 51 N. E. 1086.

Current wages.—Where nothing is said of wages, the master is held to contract for the current wages. Lawson v. Perry, Wright (Ohio) 242. But the value of the services of one having the care and management of a business in the absence of his employer cannot be determined alone by the rate of wages generally paid for salesmen or clerks. The value of the services will depend much upon the man himself as to his capacity and fidelity as well as upon the customary wages paid for that class of work. While the customary received by him is to be considered as well as the labor spent by the employee;⁴⁸ but where one employs a person whom he knows is unskilful, without any express agreement as to compensation, and afterward accepts the work, a promise to pay the customary prices of the employee is implied, especially where the work corresponds with the work usually done by him.⁴⁹ The rate of compensation agreed upon for a certain period during a preceding year has been held to govern the wages payable under the same contract for the same work for a similar period of a following year;⁵⁰ and where the wages were agreed upon for the last year of services extending over several years, the jury are authorized to infer a like contract for each preceding year.⁵¹ But the fact that a charge for a certain number of hours' services for the first year is assented to by the employer does not create an implied obligation on his part to pay twice as much the second year because the number of hours are doubled in the latter.⁵²

b. Contracts in General—(1) CONTRACT WAGE GOVERNS. The compensation fixed by the contract governs the recovery of wages,⁵³ and no other compensation wages might be a criterion it would not be the only one. Where the services in their nature involve trust and confidence, and peculiar fitness and capacity to manage there can hardly be said to be a "ruling rate of wages" for employment of such a character applicable alike to all persons who might be employed. It cannot be said that the value of the services cannot in any degree be based upon the wages for like services at places in the county other than where the services are to be performed unless it is shown that the rate of wages elsewhere in the county was the same, since a comparison might be made, even if the wages differed in the county, which would in some degree tend to show the value of the services at the place where performed. Crusoe v. Clark, 127 Cal. 341, 59 Pac. 700.

Salary as expert.—A person employed to do work such as is done by an expert bookkeeper may be entitled to an expert bookkeeper's salary, although the word "expert" was not used in the contract of hire. Von Kaas v. Hamilton, 63 Wis. 132, 23 N. W. 424.

Services as "housekeeper".—The value of the services performed as a "housekeeper" is to be decided by the duties actually performed; and the recovery is not restricted to services involving merely the control and care of the house. Edgecomb v. Buckhout, 146 N. Y. 332, 40 N. E. 991, 28 L. R. A. 816. But where one employed under a contract by which she was to receive "housekeeper's wages" also performed services as teacher, it was held that she should have been limited to a recovery for housekeeper's services. Heideman v. Bolger, 65 Ill. App. 658.

Expectation to pay liberally.—In an action ex contractu for services, where the evidence authorizes the conclusion that the employer intended to pay, and the person employed expected to receive, a very liberal compensation, a verdict may be in conformity with the intention and expectation. Chiles v. Craig, 4 Dana (Ky.) 544.

Amount work is 'worth to employee'.—Where A employed B to do a certain work, knowing B's habits and ability to do the work, it was held that B was entitled to recover for the work what it was worth to him to do it. Felt v. Rockingham School Dist. No. 2, 24 Vt. 297.

Acceptance of offer.—The failure of the employer to object to the price named by the employee shows an acceptance of the compensation proposed. Norton v. Higbee, 38 Mo. App. 467; Wilder v. Stanley, 40 Vt. 105.

Limitation as to time.—The written appointment of claimant to supervise the construction of a gun, having a device of his own invention, stated, "You will be allowed a compensation of $200 a month for two months." Claimant continued his supervision for nineteen months. It was held that four hundred dollars was the limit of his compensation, although the period of two months stated in the appointment was necessarily less than that required to complete the work. Yates v. U. S., 25 Ct. Cl. 296.

Change of work or place of work.—If a person is employed by contract to do certain work, or to act in a certain capacity, and he is sent to some other place, or put at some other work, and nothing is said as to wages, it will be presumed that he is working at the wages fixed by the contract; but such presumption will not arise where the employee, can be recovered,⁵⁴ irrespective of what the services were actually worth.⁵⁵ The employer cannot reduce the wages for the term during the period of employment,⁵⁶ unless the employee consents thereto or acquiesces therein.⁵⁷

(II) AMOUNT OPTIONAL WITH EMPLOYER, EMPLOYEE, OR THIRD PERSON. If the employer agrees to pay what the services are worth, he cannot fix the compensation at such sum as he pleases but must pay what the services are reasonably worth.⁵⁸ So, even if the compensation is left entirely to the employer, the employee is entitled to recover a reasonable remuneration for services performed by him.⁵⁹ Where the employer is to fix the compensation, the employee may recover the reasonable value of the services unless the employer exercises his right to fix the compensation at the completion of the services, or at least when called at the request of the employer, removes to a foreign state where he renders no service for the employer, although the employer pays the amount of the employee's board in such state. Granz v. Lichtenhein, 84 Hun (N. Y.) 131, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 469.

Different wages for different work.—Where the contract provides different wages for different kinds of work, the amount which the employee can recover thereunder depends on the time which he spent respectively in the different kinds of work. Brown v. Vinal, 3 Mete. (Mass.) 533; Pressey v. H. B. Smith Mach. Co., 45 N. J. Eq. 872, 19 Atl. 618; Riley v. New York, 96 N. Y. 331 [affirming 49 N. Y. Super. Ct. 537].

Percentage of master's salary.—Where an employee was to receive for his services one half of the salary and compensation allowed to his employer, an officer, and the latter's compensation was increased retrospectively, the employee was entitled to one half of the increased compensation. Adair v. Maxwell, 17 Ill. 98.

Days for which recovery permissible.—The day of employment and the day of discharge will be considered as entire days in estimating the amount due for personal services. Olson v. Rushfeldt, 81 Minn. 381, 84 N. W. 123. Where the employment is for so much a day, "Sundays and all," from the day the employee starts "until his return," he is entitled to recover the agreed compensation for the Sundays included in the time he spent away from home, although he performed no work on those days. Alfree v. Gates, 82 Iowa 19, 47 N. W. 993. And where one was employed as a superintendent of a mining corporation, his right to recover for services was not limited to days when he was actually employed with the men working at the mines, where the by-law defining his duties plainly contemplated other duties which might properly be performed at other times. Calkins v. Seabury-Calkins Consol. Min. Co., 5 S. D. 299, 58 N. W. 797.

Number of hours.—Where one employed by the day, but not beginning work on some days at the usual time, informed his employer that he charged for full time as he did a full day's work, to which no objection was made, he may recover his full charge. Willey v. Warden, 27 Vt. 655. One employed to work a certain number of hours per day cannot recover for parts of days less than the prescribed number of hours, where his failure to work is not due to any interference or neglect on the part of the employer, although the contract provides for payment by the hour. Wilson v. Lyle, (Pa. 1889) 16 Atl. 861.

Implied contract by assignee to pay same wages as assignor.—Where one is employed at stipulated wages, and afterward the contract is assigned to a third person, and the employment continued without any new agreement, there is no implied contract that the employee should work for the same wages for the assignee, but only evidence from which the jury may infer such contract. Connor v. Hackley, 2 Mete. (Mass.) 613.

upon to do so.⁶⁰ If the compensation is left optional with the employee, he cannot make an unreasonable and oppressive charge.⁶¹ If the compensation is to be fixed by a third person, no recovery can be had for the services where no application has been made to him to fix the compensation.⁶²

(iii) AGREEMENT FOR INCREASE IN WAGES. An agreement for an increase of wages at a future time, made when the contract of employment is entered into, must be specific,⁶³ and is not enforceable if it rests in effect in the option of the employer.⁶⁴ The right to an increase, as provided for in the contract, may be forfeited,⁶⁵ or waived,⁶⁶ and cannot be recovered if the agreement for an increase is conditional unless such condition has been fulfilled.⁶⁷

Mistake.—Where a promise of an increase in wages by reason of a change to work requiring greater skill is followed by the receipt of increased wages, without any further agreement, the employer cannot contend that the money was received by mistake or with knowledge of the overpayment so as to raise an implied promise to repay. *Kennedy v. 66. Seeber v. American Min., etc., Co., 57 Hun (N. Y.) 591, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 851, holding that the acceptance of a partial increase without objection, although less than the amount claimed, prevented the employee from recovering the latter sum.

67. Arkansas.—Van Vleet v. Hayes, 56 Ark. 128, 19 S. W. 427.

Colorado.—See McCormick v. Cox, 8 Colo. App. 17, 44 Pac. 768, holding that where an employee agreed to work for half wages until ore was struck, whereupon he was to be paid his back wages from the proceeds thereof, but the proceeds proved inadequate for full reimbursement of both employer and employee, the latter could recover only his pro rata share, in the absence of any agreement as to priorities.

Connecticut.—Woodbridge v. Pratt, etc., Co., 69 Conn. 304, 37 Atl. 688.

Massachusetts.—Collett v. Smith, 143 Mass. 473, 10 N. E. 173, holding that where the increase depended on the employer continuing the business there was a continuance of the business where he carried on the same business with a partner.

Wisconsin.—Whitworth v. Brown, 85 Wis. 375, 55 N. W. 422, continuance in manufacturing business.

68. See also PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

69. See Gillett v. Deranco, 5 Rob. (La.) 13 (holding that one employed to liquidate the affairs of a commercial partnership cannot claim a commission on the value of goods divided in kind among the partners, but may claim a compensation proportioned to his trouble); Byrnes v. Baldwin, 17 Misc. (N. Y.) 280, 40 N. Y. Suppl. 386 (holding that, under a contract whereby the employee was to be paid for superintending the manufacture of liquor at the end of each month, a certain sum per gallon on the amount of actual sales effected during each month, he is entitled to such sum on every gallon manufactured under his superintendence, the amount to become due on the sale of the liquor, although it was not sold until after he left the employer's service).

Consideration for agreement.—Where plaintiff was engaged to work life insurance for defendant at a stated salary, expense incurred in boarding defendant, and work performed in renewing old policies, which was not contemplated in the original contract, were sufficient consideration to support a subsequent agreement granting him commissions in addition to salary. Raibe v. Gorrell, 105 Wis. 636, 81 N. W. 1009.

Allowance to employee for sums paid to others.—One who agreed to make cheese for a factory, and to "make all the sales" and draw all the checks for a certain sum for each one hundred pounds of cheese made, was entitled, in addition, to commissions paid by him to brokers in distant places, whose services were necessary in making sales, and employment by consent,⁷⁰ or pursuant to an option in the contract,⁷¹ or by discharge for cause,⁷² before the end of the term provided for in the contract, does not, in the absence of special circumstances, forfeit the right to commissions already earned.

d. Profits or Products of Business—(1) CONTRACTS IN GENERAL.⁷³ Compensation for the services of an employee is sometimes fixed, wholly or in part, at a certain per cent of the net profits of the business in which he is employed.⁷⁴ were according to the ordinary usage. Bilaborrow v. James, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 18.

What constitutes expenses.—Where a contract provided for a salary and a commission on the receipts less expenses, the cost of merchandise was not a portion of the expenses. Freudenberger v. Sternberg, 67 N. J. L. 297, 51 Atl. 699.

Time when payable.—Where a contract provided for commission on cash receipts, to be computed yearly, payable after three months' notice, the commission was not payable, except on three months' notice after the termination of the year. Freudenberger v. Sternberg, 67 N. J. L. 297, 51 Atl. 699.

Where no time is fixed for the payment of commissions the commission account is to be deducted at the end of the period of employment, and a provision for weekly withdrawals, to be charged to the commission account, imports an agreement to pay such sum from week to week as provided for in the contract, irrespective of the question whether commissions had accrued for application to each withdrawal. Weinberg v. Blum, 13 Daly (N. Y.) 399; Schwerin v. Rosen, 45 Misc. (N. Y.) 409, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 407.

Construction of particular contracts see Weik v. Williamson Gunning Advertising Co., 109 Mo. App. 6, 84 S. W. 144 (contract for twenty-five dollars a week and a commission, with provision that the employee's compensation should equal fifty dollars per week, was held to mean that the minimum compensation under the contract was fifty dollars per week); Fry v. Hestwood, 21 Wash. 424, 53 Pac. 206.

Waiver of right to claim by laches see Des Moines Ins. Co. v. Tones, 113 Iowa 119, 84 N. W. 948.

How estimated where contract terminated before end of year.—Where a contract of employment of a manager of a sales branch of a business provided for commission on the cash receipts less expenses, to be computed yearly, the commission could be ascertained only by deducting the cash receipts of the whole year from the expenses, and reckoning the agreed percentage of the proportionate part of the residue represented by the manager's time of service during the year; the contract having been terminated within such year. Freudenberger v. Sternberg, 67 N. J. L. 297, 51 Atl. 699.

71. Blasdel v. Souther, 6 Gray (Mass.) 149, holding, however, that where commissions are to be based on the sale of the goods by the employee during the term of the contract, and the contract is terminated by the employer, according to provisions therein, before it would otherwise terminate, no commissions are payable on goods then in the process of manufacture, but not finished or paid for, although made under contracts procured by the solicitations of the employee.

72. Abendpost Co. v. Hertel, 67 Ill. App. 501, holding that where an employee to solicit advertisements is properly discharged before the expiration of his term, he is, in the absence of any particular provision in the contract, entitled to a commission on all advertising procured by him prior to that time, although not then published.

74. Massachusetts.—Allcott v. Boston Steam Flour Mill Co., 9 Cush. 376, holding, under a particular contract, that the compensation was intended to be calculated upon the profits of an entire year, and not on the profits of a part of a year.

Minnesota.—Sease v. Gillette-Herzog Mfg. Co., 55 Minn. 349, 57 N. W. 58, holding that where the agreement was for a percentage of the profits, defined as a certain per cent of the dividend declared for each year, that the employee was entitled to have his percentage computed each year upon the net profits subject to dividend, under the contract, irrespective of whether a dividend was actually declared.

New Jersey.—Dwyer v. Bonitz, (Ch. 1895) 31 Atl. 172, where a yearly rest to ascertain profits at the end of the contract year instead of the end of the calendar year was held proper under particular circumstances.

New York.—Jennery v. Olmstead, 90 N. Y. 363 (holding that where an employee under a contract for years was to receive a salary not to exceed a certain sum, from the net profits, the employee could not claim compensation for the services of a particular year during which no profits were made, from the profits of a subsequent year); Osbrey v. Reimer, 49 Barb. 265; Clapp v. Astor, 2 Edw. 379, holding that where the employee was to receive the dividends or profits upon a certain amount of stock during the time of his employment, which was not fixed, and no dividend was declared until after he had left the service, a subsequent dividend could not be apportioned in favor of the employee.

Canada.—Sims v. Harris, 1 Ont. L. Rep. 445, where the employment was for a year

Where provision is also made for a fixed salary in addition, the right to receive such salary is generally held to be independent of whether any profits are made.⁷⁵ The fact that a contract of employment provides that the employee shall have a share of the profits does not of itself make the parties partners.⁷⁶

(II) WHAT ARE NET PROFITS. The net profits of a business, a percentage of which an employee is to receive for his services, is what remains after all legitimate expenses thereof have been paid.⁷⁷ The interest on capital invested by unless the business was disposed of before the expiration of that time, and the employee was to be given a specified percentage of the net profits of the business at the end of the year, and it was held, that he was entitled to such percentage of the net profits up to the time of the sale of the business before the end of the year.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 85.

Effect of increase in amount of stock.—Where the salary of the employee was to be based on a certain per cent of the amount paid as dividends, and thereafter the capital stock was doubled, it was held a question for the jury whether it was the intent of the parties, in entering into the contract, that the amount of capital on which the employee's interest was to be computed was to remain the same. Bradburn v. Solvay Process Co., 18 N. Y. App. Div. 542, 46 N. Y. Suppl. 161.

Interest on profits.—An employee whose compensation is measured by a share in the profits is entitled to interest on compensation remaining, after it is due, in the hands of the employer. Goldsmith v. Latz, 96 Va. 680, 32 S. E. 483.

What constitutes a sale.—A transfer of their shares by all the stock-holders of a corporation to a syndicate, to continue the business under a new form of incorporation, at the same place, and a subsequent transfer of the plant and all the stock on hand to the new company, is not a sale of the goods manufactured by the company, within the meaning of a contract between the old company and a superintendent, under which he was entitled to a commission on the profits realized on all sales of manufactured goods. Woodbridge v. Pratt, etc., Co., 69 Conn. 304, 37 Atl. 688.

Profits on goods actually sold after the termination of the employee's contract are not to be considered where the contract calls for a certain per cent of the net profits for a certain number of years from a certain date. Wallace v. Beebe, 12 Allen (Mass.) 354. See also Briggs v. Groves, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 765 [affirmed in 132 N. Y. 545, 30 N. E. 865].

Half interest in increase of live stock.—Where the employee is to receive a half interest in the increase in stock on a farm, he is entitled only to a half of the stock on hand at the termination of the agreement, after deducting the full number furnished by the owner at the commencement of the hiring. Long v. Kee, 42 La. Ann. 899, 8 So. 610.

76. See PARTNERSHIP.

77. Arthur Jordan Co. v. Caylor, 36 Ind. App. 640, 76 N. E. 419.

The phrase "cash receipts, less all expenses," is not synonymous with "net profits." Freudenberger v. Sternberg, 67 N. J. L. 297, 51 Atl. 699.

Items held chargeable as expenses: Salary paid to a partner (McDonald v. Buckstaff, 56 Nebr. 88, 76 N. W. 476); cost of materials consumed and depreciation of property bought for use in business (Danolds v. Lord, 83 Hun (N. Y.) 359, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 915); allowance for bad debts, the usual rebates to the employer's customers, payment for repairs charged to the account of the merchandise repaired, and taxes paid which had been charged to stock account (Conville v. Shook, 144 N. Y. 686, 39 N. E. 405); salary of book-keeper in whose employment plaintiff acquiesced (Boisnot v. Wilson, 109 N. Y. App. Div. 569, 96 N. Y. Suppl. 581); depreciation arising from the running out of the lease and the waste of the plant and machinery (Rish-ton v. Grissell, L. R. 5 Eq. 326).

Items not chargeable as expenses: Salary for services rendered by the master, or money expended in moving the master's store to a new location (Boisnot v. Wilson, 109 N. Y. App. Div. 569, 96 N. Y. Suppl. 581), or deterioration in the value of property belonging to one of the parties individually (Mack v. Shortle, 76 N. Y. App. Div. 586, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 109).

What constitutes receipts.—Outstanding accounts are properly regarded as receipts in the absence of anything to show that they are not good and collectable. Mack v. Shortle, 76 N. Y. App. Div. 586, 79 N. Y. Suppl. 109. The cash surrender value of a liquor-tax certificate and insurance policy which were paid for out of the proceeds of the business is properly included in the profits. Mack v. Shortle, supra. But the amount the master realized from the sale of the lease, on moving his store, should not be included in the profits. Boisnot v. Wilson, 109 N. Y. App. Div. 569, 96 N. Y. Suppl. 581.

Profits upon the sale of the business during a particular year, that is, the excess of the amount realized by the sale over the estimated value, cannot be included as the basis on which to figure the net profits. Rish-ton v. Grissell, L. R. 5 Eq. 326; Sims v. Harris, 1 Ont. L. Rep. 445.

Profits from another branch of business.—One employed to conduct a coal business, to the employer,⁷⁸ especially where the employee had no knowledge of any agreement between the employers therefor,⁷⁹ or the interest on loans obtained by the employer and used in the business,⁸⁰ is ordinarily not chargeable as expense. Whether the amounts paid to the employee as a periodical compensation or as advances are chargeable to the expense account depends on the terms of the particular contract.⁸¹ If an employee is to receive a per cent of the net profits of all sums realized on certain contracts, only the expenses necessary on account of such contracts should be deducted, and not any of the expenses incidental to the management of the employer's business.⁸²

e. Additional Compensation and Charges⁸³—(1) EXTRA WORK. Unless there is an express agreement to pay therefor,⁸⁴ or a uniform and notorious custom sufficient to warrant the presumption that a contract was made with reference be paid a portion of the net profits of the business, is not entitled to any portion of the advance in value of the real estate purchased by the coal company upon which to locate its coal yard. Hawley v. Kansas, etc., Coal Co., 48 Kan. 593, 30 Pac. 14. So where the erection of a warehouse was not within the legitimate scope of the business of the firm in which an employee was to have an interest in the profits, he was not entitled to commissions on the difference between the investment and what the firm received from the warehouse on dissolution. Amsden v. Dunham, 78 N. Y. App. Div. 33, 78 N. Y. Suppl. 989.

Bad faith on part of employer.—Loss of receipts or increased expenditures due to bad faith on the part of the employer are to be added to the profits actually earned in computing the compensation to be paid the employee. McDonald v. Buckstaff, 56 Nebr. 88, 76 N. W. 476.

Actions against employer after accounting.—The amount due the employee should be determined by accountings between them without regard to suits subsequently brought by a third person, or threatened, against the employer for breach of contract; and, in case judgment subsequently should go against the employer in such suits, his remedy would be against the employee for contribution. Elbert v. Haebler, 149 N. Y. 343, 43 N. E. 914. See also Morrow v. Murphy, 120 Mich. 204, 79 N. W. 193, 80 N. W. 255.

Property used by employee.—Where a factory superintendent, whose compensation was a share of the profits, used property belonging to it for himself, he was chargeable with the value thereof, although it was customary to permit the use of such property by the superintendent and charge it to expense, where it does not appear that the owner knew the custom. Morrow v. Murphy, 120 Mich. 204, 79 N. W. 193, 80 N. W. 255.

The construction of the parties of a prior similar contract, as to what constitutes expenses, should be adopted in construing a second contract. Arthur Jordan Co. v. Caylor, 36 Ind. App. 640, 76 N. E. 419.

78. Morrow v. Murphy, 120 Mich. 204, 79 N. W. 193, 80 N. W. 255; Paine v. Howells, 90 N. Y. 660; Rishton v. Grissell, L. R. 5 Eq. 326.

80. Selz v. Buel, 105 Ill. 122. See also McDonald v. Buckstaff, 56 Nebr. 88, 76 N. W. 476, holding that interest on moneys borrowed by a partner for the benefit of another manufacturing plant in which he was interested is not an expense.

81. See Briggs v. Groves, 9 N. Y. Suppl. 565 [affirmed in 132 N. Y. 545, 30 N. E. 865], where there was no salary but a portion of the net profits, a part of which was paid weekly as the work progressed, and it was held that such weekly payments should not be treated as a part of the expense account. The cases of Buning v. Kittell, 4 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 474, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 485, and Fuller v. Miller, 105 Mass. 103, are therein distinguished as involving a fixed weekly compensation in addition to a portion of the net profits. In Selz v. Buel, 105 Ill. 122, an employer agreed to pay a sum equal to one fifth of the net profits of the business, which sum he guaranteed should not be less than seven thousand five hundred dollars a year, and it was held that the amount to be paid the employee could not be charged as an expense. In Rishton v. Grissell, L. R. 5 Eq. 326, an employee was to have £500 a year for his services, and in addition the excess of a certain per cent from the profits over said sum, and it was held that the employer could not deduct £500 before the profits were estimated.

Co. Rep. (Pa.) 53 (holding that a servant may recover for extra services if he shows a contract to that effect, although no rate was agreed upon). See also Flicker v. Graner, 23 Misc. (N. Y.) 112, 50 N. Y.

thereto,⁸⁵ a servant cannot ordinarily recover additional compensation for extra work within the scope of his employment.⁸⁶ On the other hand the general rule is that where a servant, employed for a certain time for special work, renders services outside the scope of his employment, on the request of the employer, although without any express agreement for extra compensation, he may recover the reasonable value thereof;⁸⁷ but it has been held that this rule must be cautiously applied, and that the service must be so far outside of the sphere of the employment as to indicate a probable intention on the part of the master to allow extra compensation therefor.⁸⁸

(II) PROMISE OF BONUS. Where a bonus is promised the employee at a certain time and on certain conditions, he has no right thereto until after such time,⁸⁹ nor is he entitled to the bonus until the conditions designated have been

Compare Edrington v. Leach, 34 Tex. 285, holding that where one contracts to serve half the time and to receive but half pay, he may show that he served all the time and recover at the rate stipulated for in the contract.

Extra hours.—No extra compensation can be recovered by an employee for working overtime, in the absence of an express agreement. Luske v. Hotchkiss, 37 Conn. 219, 9 Am. Rep. 314; Levi v. Reid, 91 Ill. App. 430; Mathison v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 72 N. Y. App. Div. 254, 76 N. Y. Suppl. 89; Koplitz v. Powell, 56 Wis. 671, 14 N. W. 831; Steam Dredge No. 1, 87 Fed. 760. And see supra, III, B, 2, b.

Work on Sunday.—In the absence of a special contract to pay therefor, a servant cannot recover extra compensation for Sunday work (Guthrie v. Merrill, 4 Kan. 187), especially where he knew that certain work would be required of him on Sunday (Robinson v. Webb, 73 Ill. App. 569).

Working during vacation period.—An employee cannot recover extra compensation, in the absence of any express agreement therefor, where he works during the time in which he might have taken a vacation with pay; nor can he recover if the employer had refused to allow the vacation. Schurr v. Savigny, 85 Mich. 144, 48 N. W. 547.

Presumption against agreement to pay extra compensation.—In a suit for extra compensation brought by a bookkeeper against his employer, when the proof discloses false entries by plaintiff in defendant's books, evidencing defendant's assent to pay extra compensation, if unexplained and unsupported by confirmatory and satisfactory evidence, they create a strong presumption against the demand. Levy v. McCan, 44 La. Ann. 528, 10 So. 794.

Questions of fact.—Whether extra work was regarded by the servant as in the line of his employment, from the fact that he made no demand for compensation until after he was discharged, is a question of fact. Snyder v. Zearfoss, 41 Wkly. Notes Cas. (Pa.) 525.

Griffiths, 48 Misc. (N. Y.) 398, 95 N. Y. Suppl. 573.

89. Allen v. Aylesworth, 58 N. J. Eq. 349, 44 Atl. 178.

A provision that if the employee "should leave" the company his right to a bonus in the stock of the company, promised to him on the happening of a certain contingency, should fulfilled.⁹⁰ When the parties mutually terminate a contract of employment before the expiration of its term, a bonus already earned is recoverable.⁹¹

f. Renewal or Continuance of Employment.⁹² It will be presumed, in the absence of other proof, where an employee hired for a definite term at a fixed price, and continues in his employment after the term without any new contract, that the parties intended that he should be paid the same wages which were payable to him under the original contract.⁹³ There is no such presumption, however, where the employee continues in other or different employment;⁹⁴ where the agreement as to the period of service and the amount of wages was not made until some time after the creation of the relation;⁹⁵ or where the employer assigns his contract to a third person, and the employee continues in the service be only to pro rata shares, the dismissal of the employee was not a leaving of the corporation. Price v. Minot, 107 Mass. 49.

Time to sue.—Where a stock-holder contracted with an employee to transfer to him certain stock after a certain period of employment, his participating in the dismissal of the employee, and attempting to terminate the contract before the date stipulated, entitles the employee to sue to establish his right to the stock at once. Price v. Minot, 107 Mass. 49.

90. Winter v. Southern Loan, etc., Co., (Va. 1897) 26 S. E. 507, holding that where the bonus was conditioned on the sale of specific bonds there was no implied agreement that the employer would put the bonds on the market.

Satisfactory performance of services.—Where a bonus was agreed upon if the services of the employee were satisfactory, and it was provided that the employee might be discharged at any time if his services were not up to his employer's expectations, in which event he was to receive no bonus, the fact that the employee continued in his employment until the end of the term was sufficient evidence that his services were satisfactory and entitled him to recover the bonus. Fischer v. Conhaim, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 791, 72 N. Y. Suppl. 1102 [affirming 35 Misc. 125, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 315]. But where a bonus is promised if the employee shall faithfully and satisfactorily perform his duties for the term fixed, the right thereto depends on the employer's decision, at the end of the period fixed on, as to the question of the employee's faithfulness, so that if he is discharged for cause there can be no recovery. Dwyer v. Rathbone, 1 Silv. Sup. (N. Y.) 418, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 505. And see Joseph Campbell Preserve Co. v. Holcomb, 67 Kan. 48, 72 Pac. 552, holding that where the payment of a bonus was to depend entirely on the determination of the employer at the end of the services that the services were satisfactory, the employee must show the satisfaction of the employer at the end of the services.

of the assignee without any express agreement between them as to the wages to be paid.⁹⁶

g. Time During Which Interest Runs.⁹⁷ If the wages are not payable on a certain date,⁹⁸ or if the amount due as wages is unliquidated,⁹⁹ interest does not begin to run thereon until after a demand of payment. On the other hand, if wages are payable at a specified time, the general rule is that interest runs from such date.¹

h. Waiver or Estoppel of Employee. A servant who presents a monthly account;² who gives a receipt in full each week or month for the services performed therein;³ who accepts periodical payments, without objection, with knowledge that the employer regards them as payment in full;⁴ or who acquiesces in monthly statements rendered by his employer, and by which he is requested to advise the employer of any error therein,⁵ cannot thereafter claim wages for such periods in excess of such amounts.

4. DEDUCTIONS OR FORFEITURES⁶—a. In General. Forfeiture of, or deductions from, the wages agreed to be paid an employee⁷ may result from an express provision therefor in a contract of hire;⁸ or may follow, independent of a contract provision as to forfeiture or deduction, from a failure to fully perform the serv-

Presumptions.—Where a servant is paid less wages than he had been receiving under his contract of employment, and takes the money, week after week, without objection or demand for more, there is a legal presumption that the money is paid and received under an agreement for a reduction, and that the amount paid and received is in full payment. He cannot remain in the service with a mental reservation of an intention to sue for an alleged balance after his employment has come to an end. Osborn v. Presser, 8 Pa. Dist. 271.

Willingness to work.—A contract of theatrical employment providing for weekly payment with deductions only "for any nights or days on which the party of the second part may not be able to perform or sing, through illness or other unavoidable cause, or at such times that the company may not be giving performances," does not authorize a deduction for an evening when a performance was omitted owing to the absence of performers which was not the fault of either party to the contract, where the employee was ready and willing to play her part. Wentworth v. Whitney, 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 100.

Losses on sales.—Where the compensation was to be one half the profits on sales made by the employee subject to one half the losses, the employer could recover one half the losses without obtaining a judgment for the price of goods sold by the employee and issuing execution thereon in order to prove that such claim was uncollectable. McLaren v. Stokes, 14 N. Y. Suppl. 489.

A voluntary dissolution of a partnership, if such dissolution occurs before the end of the year for which it had employed a person, makes the firm liable for a proportional part of a sum to be paid at the end of the year if the contract became void by "death or mutual consent." Redheffer v. Leathe, 15 Mo. App. 12.

Deducting pay of assistant.—Where an employee contracted to employ an assistant for the service of his employer, without any agreement on the part of the employee to pay such assistant, the sum so paid such assistant cannot be deducted from the wages of the employee. Frazer v. Gregg, 20 Ill. 299.

Indefinite agreement.—One rendering services under a contract providing for fixed wages, and that a part of the wages shall be applied to a claim against his father, can recover the full amount, in the absence of an agreement as to the amount to be so applied.

ices to the end of the term agreed upon;⁹ or from the negligence or misconduct of the employee in the course of his employment.¹⁰ Gifts by the employer to the employee, in the absence of special circumstances, are not to be deducted from his wages.¹¹

b. Improper Acts of Servant—(i) AS PRECLUDING ANY RECOVERY. A breach of the contract of employment other than by quitting the service may prevent a recovery of any wages thereunder,¹² as where the employee embezzles the money of his employer,¹³ or commits other criminal offenses, although not immediately injurious to the person or property of the employer.¹⁴ But a breach, after part performance, where it does not go to the essence of the contract, will not prevent a recovery thereon,¹⁵ except where the breach was wilful and intentional.¹⁶ If the employee has failed to perform the contract according to its terms, but the employer has received the benefit of the labor which exceeds the damage resulting from the breach of the contract, a recovery on a quantum meruit is ordinarily permissible;¹⁷ and this is true whether the labor was received by the assent of the employer before the breach or whether it was received after the performance of all the work which was in fact done.¹⁸

(ii) AS GROUND FOR DEDUCTIONS. If an employee is negligent, or performs his services without a reasonable amount of skill, he can recover only what his services are reasonably worth, or the contract price less the damages resulting therefrom.¹⁹ But acts sufficient to justify a dismissal will not justify a refusal to Assault on employer.—Any acts of violence on the part of the employee incompatible with the employer's peaceable exercise of all the rights of dominion over his property, such as an assault by the employee on the employer, forfeits the employee's right to recover anything under the contract. Henderson v. Stiles, 14 Ga. 135.

E. 637 (holding that ordinarily the damages sustained by a failure to perform some of the conditions of the contract may properly be allowed against the full amount claimed; but, unless the failure is substantial, material, and strikes at the very essence of the contract, or it appears that the parties intended that any such violation should render the contract of no effect, it cannot defeat a recovery). See also Russel v. New York, 1 Luz. Leg. Obs. (N. Y.) 323.

A mere failure to pay over moneys received, belonging to the employer, which failure may not have been criminal, and may have been caused by a mistake or neglect, is not a bar to the recovery of wages. Turner v. Kouwenhoven, 100 N. Y. 115, 2 N. E. 637.

16. Siple v. Stickney, 190 Mass. 43, 76 N. E. 226, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 469, holding that the "wilful" failure of one managing a farm for the owner to return accurate statements of the expenses bars a recovery for services as manager, although the stipulation of the contract for an accurate statement of expenses is not of the essence of the contract.

The employer must show that wages retained by him to pay for damages resulting from injuries to third persons through the negligence of his employee were rightfully retained, in an action by the employee to recover the amount held back. Sondheimer v. Troy, etc., R. Co., 3 N. Y. Suppl. 444.

pay less than the price stipulated, where such acts produce no direct pecuniary damage to the employer who did not discharge the employee, although aware thereof.²⁰

c. Part Performance²¹—(1) ENTIRETY OF CONTRACT.²² A contract to render personal services for a specified time,²³ as for a year,²⁴ or years,²⁵ even though the wages are a fixed sum per month,²⁶ is usually considered an entire contract so that a recovery thereon can be had only upon showing full performance or some valid excuse for non-performance. Where one employed for a definite time under a contract fixing the damages for its breach is prevented, without default either of himself or of his employer, from fulfilling it, he may recover for

Day laborers.—Where a man working by the day fails to exercise ordinary care and skill, or to do his work in an ordinary, fair, and workmanlike manner, he cannot recover as wages the value of work properly done, but the employer is entitled to a deduction for any defect in the labor or in the manner of its performance. Eaton v. Woolly, 28 Wis. 628.

Damages equal to, or in excess of, wages.—If the employer suffers damages by the neglect or unskillfulness of his employee, equal to or in excess of the wages agreed upon, the employee can recover nothing for his labor. Byrd v. Boyd, 4 McCord (S. C.) 246, 17 Am. Dec. 740; Goslin v. Hodson, 24 Vt. 140.

Knowledge of unskillfulness.—One who employs an unskilful artisan, or tyro, knowing his deficiencies, is liable to him for his usual prices, however inferior the performance may be, especially when the work has been received. Peters v. Craig, 6 Dana (Ky.) 307.

Loss charged to another servant.—It is no defense to a suit by an employee for wages to show that the employee had made a mistake whereby the employer had suffered loss, where such loss had been charged to an agent who was the employer's superior, and under whom he was employed, and it was merely to reimburse such agent that it had stopped the wages; such a course not being authorized by any rule of the company known to the employee, or agreed to by him. Georgia R. Co. v. Gouedy, 111 Ga. 310, 36 S. E. 691.

Acts same as those done by employer.—The employer cannot sustain a counter-claim for the loss of wheat left unloaded where he gave no orders as to any unloading, and had himself previously left wheat exposed in the same manner. Rawlings v. Clark, 19 Colo. App. 214, 74 Pac. 346.

But a contract for ordinary services for a stipulated time, where the wages are payable in instalments and there is nothing in the nature of the work which shows that its entire performance was required or contemplated in order to bind the employer to pay any part of the stated compensation, has been held not an entire contract so that a complete performance is a condition precedent to a recovery for services rendered. *Walsh v. What constitutes abandonment before end of term—Making up lost time.—Where a servant contracts to labor for a limited period, he cannot be required, after the expiration of the period, to render additional services under such contract to make up for lost time. McDonald v. Montague, 30 Vt. 357; Bast v. Byrne, 51 Wis. 531, 8 N. W. 494, 37 Am. Rep. 841. Where the contract is for a certain number of years and for such additional time as will make up any time lost by the servant, the latter is not bound to make up time during which the employer suspended business, it being agreed that no wages should be paid during that time. Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bost, 104 Pa. St. 26.

Abandonment by mistake.—Where one employed for a specified time quit a few days before the end of the term, under an erroneous belief that according to the legal mode of computing time under such contracts his time was up, he cannot recover the balance

although there is considerable authority to the contrary, especially where the employer has received a benefit from the labor in excess of any damages from the breach.³³ But even where a recovery is not otherwise allowable, if instalments of wages are to be paid at stated periods under an entire contract, the right thereto, after the expiration of one of the periods, is vested so as not to be affected by a subsequent abandonment of the contract.³⁴

(c) Sickness, Death, or Other Disability. As has been previously shown in the sections of another chapter, death of either party to a contract of employment, or sickness or other disability preventing the employee from performing the contract, terminates the contract unless it is otherwise agreed.³⁵ But sickness,³⁶ or of wages due him, although the employer had consented to his absence during a part of the term and had refused to take him back after he had broken his contract by leaving. Winn v. Southgate, 17 Vt. 355.

Return and refusal of employer to continue employment.—Where one employed for a specified time quits, after working a part thereof, but shortly after returns and offers to complete the contract, to which the employer will not agree, the employee can recover nothing for the time he has worked. Nelichka v. Esterly, 29 Minn. 146, 12 N. W. 457; Lantry v. Parks, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 63.

Damages equal to, or in excess of, value of services.—If the damages accruing to the employer by the breach, where pleaded as a set-off, equal or exceed the value of the services rendered, no recovery can be had. Pixler v. Nichols, 8 Iowa 106, 74 Am. Dec. 298.

Payment other than in money.—Where one employed for a definite time was to be paid in boarding, clothing, and schooling, and he voluntarily abandoned the service before the end of the term, a promise to pay in money what the services were reasonably worth, beyond the damages, will not be implied, the employer being always ready to pay in the manner stipulated. *Roundy v. But see Mills v. Buffin, 12 Ill. App. 111, where the employee was ill the day before the quitting and voluntarily resumed work the day he quitted, and in the meantime engaged to work for a third person, and it was held that he could not recover on a quantum meruit.

Rules of employer.—No recovery can be had where an employee leaves his work by death,³⁷ of the employee is generally regarded as an act of God which excuses performance so that a recovery may be had for services actually performed. And the fact that an employee who has been sick does not return and offer to complete the period of service, after his health is restored, does not prevent a recovery.³⁸ But where the sickness ought to have been anticipated, as in case of confinement in child birth, no recovery can be had on a quantum meruit after the servant has left the work because thereof.³⁹ Whether the recovery is to be based upon the reasonable value of the services,⁴⁰ or upon the contract wage,⁴¹ is the subject of conflicting decisions; but at any event the damages sustained by reason of non-performance are to be deducted.⁴² Recovery can only be had for the completed services, and not for services for the entire contract period,⁴³ and ordinarily no recovery is allowable for the time which the employee loses during his sickness⁴⁴ or other disability.⁴⁵ reason of sickness, where a rule of the employer provides that in case of sickness employees must send word to the employer of the cause of their absence, and the contract provides for forfeiture of wages for failure to comply with the rules, where the employee did not send word as to the cause of his absence when sick, although able to do so. *Noon v. Contract fixing rights on death of party.—Under a contract between employer and employee for the payment of a per cent of the profits of each year as wages, and in case of the death of either during the year, at the rate, for the expired term, of a certain sum per annum, the executor of the employee may recover the proportional part of the sum agreed, to the date of his death, although by reason of sickness he stopped work some time before. Dunlap v. Montgomery, 123 Pa. St. 27, 16 Atl. 41.

In Alabama a rule contrary to that laid down in the text was held at an early day (Givhan v. Dailey, 4 Ala. 336), but the rule is now changed by statute which authorizes the personal representatives of a deceased servant to recover a ratable compensation for services actually rendered (Dryer v. Lewis, 57 Ala. 551).

Construction of contract as to payment for lost time.—A contract of employment, terminable at the option of either party on notice, provided that the employee should give his "entire time and ability" to his employer, for which he was to receive a certain sum per month "during said year, except the portion of said time that, through illness or any other cause, is not devoted to" the employer's interests, although, if he sold a certain amount of goods for the employer during the year, there was to be no reduction. It was held that where the employer terminated the contract during the year, before the employee had sold the required amount of goods, the employee could not claim compensation for time lost through sickness. Foster v. Henderson, 29 Oreg. 210, 45 Pac. 899.

Injuries received in line of duty.—A receiver of a railroad company is liable to an employee of the road for wages during recovery from injuries received in the line of his duty, and without fault. *Missouri Pac. 45. McDonald v. Montague, 30 Vt. 357, holding that if one agrees to work for another for a certain number of months, and is employed under his agreement until the expiration of the stipulated period, he will not be obliged, before he can recover for his services, to make up for time which he has reasonably lost during said period, neither will the employer be obliged to pay him for the time he has lost; but he must pay him such proportion of the stipulated price for the whole period contracted for as the time he has actually worked bears to the whole time agreed upon.

Attendance as witness.—The temporary absence of a servant while in attendance as a witness in court is no ground for deduction from his salary. Macintyre v. McLeod, 27 N. Brunsw. 199.

(iii) DISCHARGE FOR CAUSE. According to one line of cases, the rule is established that a dismissal for cause operates to prevent the employee from recovering any compensation for his services,⁴⁶ except that where there is a provision for periodical payments during the term of the contract, an employee who has been discharged for cause may recover, after the expiration of one or more of the periods, wages which have become due, subject to recoupment by the master for any damages suffered by him by reason of any neglect, unskilfulness, or non-performance of the services.⁴⁷ The more equitable rule, however, which prevails in many states, is that the employee is entitled to recover pro rata for the reasonable value of his services, not to exceed the contract price, up to the time of the discharge, taking into consideration the damages resulting to the employer.⁴⁸ It is generally held that no recovery of the stipulated wages is permissible in an action upon the express contract of hire,⁴⁹ although it has been held that the action must be based on the contract and not on a quantum meruit, and that the recovery should be the amount of wages up to the time of discharge less the legal damages to the employer resulting from the acts that justified the termination of the contract.⁵⁰

The reason for the rule that where an employee is prevented from carrying out his

Of course, where the servant has been discharged for cause, future wages cannot be recovered.⁵¹

(iv) CONSENT OR OPTION TO TERMINATE. Where the contract is terminable at the option of either party, the employee may quit at any time and recover for the services actually performed.⁵² So, on discharge by the employer, under such a contract, the employee may recover pro rata.⁵³ Likewise, when the parties terminate the employment by mutual consent before the expiration of the term, the contract becomes fully executed,⁵⁴ and the employee may recover for the services actually performed.⁵⁵

(v) INDEFINITE TERM. Where there is no term of service fixed by the contract, and the employee quits⁵⁶ or is discharged,⁵⁷ he may recover at the stipulated rate for the time he has worked.

d. Provisions For Forfeitures, Deductions, or Fines — (i) VALIDITY. A contract which provides for a forfeiture of all or a part of the wages due, or a fixed sum, or a deposit made at the time of entering into the contract, on the occurrence of certain breaches by the employee, is generally considered valid.⁵⁸ For instance, a provision for a forfeiture of wages, on quitting the service without giving a specified notice, where not reasonable or oppressive, will be enforced as a provision for liquidated damages;⁵⁹ but where the forfeiture covers all the wages due at the time of the breach, regardless of the amount, or contract by the justifiable conduct of his employer in discharging him that an action should be based on the contract for wages up to the time of the discharge is that the contract is still in force. Jenkins v. Long, 8 Md. 132.

whether arrearages were due to the fault of the employer, although designated as liquidated damages, it has been held that it will not be enforced.⁶⁰ A contract for forfeiture is not invalid for want of mutuality because there is no corresponding obligation on the part of the employer to give a specified notice before dismissing an employee.⁶¹

(II) EXISTENCE AND NOTICE THEREOF. There can be no forfeiture for a failure to give notice of intention to quit, although a specified notice is required by the rules of the employer, where neither the contract nor the rules provide that failure to give such notice shall constitute a forfeiture.⁶² However, the provision for forfeiture need not be contained in the contract of hiring; the signing by the employee of a receipt providing for a forfeiture on leaving without giving a certain notice, where the hiring was by the week but for no fixed time, binds the employee.⁶³ So assent to a rule of the employer providing for a forfeiture may be inferred from the employee's knowledge thereof and his continuance in the employment without objection thereto;⁶⁴ but mere knowledge of such a rule does not conclusively, and as a matter of law, show such assent.⁶⁵

(III) CONSTRUCTION OF PARTICULAR PROVISIONS—(A) Absences. A forfeiture of wages is sometimes provided for where an employee is absent from work,⁶⁶ or when he absents himself without giving notice.⁶⁷

(B) *Notice of Intention to Quit.*⁶⁸ A stipulation to forfeit part or all of the wages due on quitting without giving a specified notice will not be enforced where the quitting is not voluntary, as where the employee is arrested and imprisoned,⁶⁹ or is kept from work by sickness;⁷⁰ nor can the forfeiture be enforced where there is a mere temporary absence not constituting an abandonment.⁷¹ But the fact that the employee intended to be absent only temporarily will not avoid a forfeiture if the employer might reasonably regard his leaving and continued absence as an abandonment of the work, rendering it necessary to procure another

66. Tomlinson v. Ashworth, 50 J. P. 164, holding that where an employee was late, and on being refused an entrance said he would leave for the day, but returned shortly afterward without knowledge of the superintendent, and work was refused him, he absented himself within the rule.

Necessity for physician's certificate.—Where a contract provided for forfeiture of all wages whenever the employee should fail to perform, but that if his neglect was caused by sickness the forfeiture should not operate if a physician's certificate should be made stating that sickness unfitted the employee to do his work, it was sufficient that the physician told the employee and others similarly situated that they were unfitted for work and must leave the place where their services had been required, although he gave no written certificate. Lyons v. Story, 3 E. D. Smith (N. Y.) 113.

67. Taylor v. Carr, 30 L. J. M. C. 201, 4 L. T. Rep. N. S. 414, 9 Wkly. Rep. 699, holding that where an employee was given leave of absence for half a day on his promise to return to work the next morning, but he did not return until the following afternoon, there was no right of forfeiture, since he could not be said to be absent without notice merely by continuing his absence longer than the period which he had mentioned.

70. Harrington v. Fall River Iron Works Co., 119 Mass. 82, in which it was held that where the employee gives reasonable notice of his sickness to the employer and is absent only so long as he is unable to work, such absence does not forfeit his right to wages. See also Fuller v. Brown, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 440.

71. Partington v. Wamsutta Mills, 110 Mass. 467 (abandonment depends on acts of servant and not on his undisclosed intentions); Heber v. U. S. Flax Mfg. Co., 13 R. I. 303.

to supply his place.⁷² The notice need not be given where the employer reduces the wages and the employee refuses to accept the reduction and quits without giving the specified notice.⁷³ Where the provision is considered as liquidated damages the employer need not show the amount of his actual damages.⁷⁴

(c) Termination of Contract. Where a contract authorized the employer to terminate the employment at any time, and provides for a forfeiture of a month's salary on the termination of the contract, it has been held that the employer cannot arbitrarily terminate the contract so as to be entitled to retain a month's salary.⁷⁵ And where a forfeiture of the compensation, in so far as it consists of commissions and net profits, is provided for in case the employee should enter the employment of any person engaged in the same business, no right to forfeit exists where he enters into such employment after his discharge.⁷⁶

(d) Performance to Satisfaction of Employer. A provision that the employer may retain part of the employee's wages until the contract is fulfilled to the employer's "entire satisfaction" must be construed to mean "reasonable" satisfaction.⁷⁷

(e) Fines Against Ball Players. A discretion vested in the manager of a ball team to fine or suspend any player without pay does not authorize him to impose a fine for a cause wholly disconnected with the rendition of services under the contract.⁷⁸ The notice of suspension is sufficient where the contract gives the right to suspend the player for a definite period without pay in case of failure to keep himself in sound physical condition, where it merely states that the player is suspended without pay until he is in a fit condition to play according to his contract.⁷⁹

e. Waiver of Right to Deduct or to Enforce Forfeiture. The right to claim a forfeiture of all or a part of the employee's wages, where he abandons the work before the end of the term, or is guilty of misconduct authorizing his discharge, may be waived by acts of the employer inconsistent with an intention to insist upon a forfeiture.⁸⁰ For example, the right to declare a forfeiture may be waived by an offer to pay pro rata the wages earned up to the time of quitting,⁸¹ or a tender of payment in full for the services,⁸² or the giving of a note for the wages earned.⁸³ So a continuance of the employment to the end of the term, after notice of the alleged misconduct of an employee,⁸⁴ or the taking the servant back

Amount forfeitable.—Where one employed by the week is to forfeit all wages in default of notice of intention to quit, and the wages are ascertained on Thursday but not paid until Saturday, an employee who has worked a week, from Thursday until Thursday, but leaves on Friday, will forfeit the wages due on the Thursday but not payable until Saturday as well as the wages earned after Thursday. *Walsh v. after an absence,⁸⁵ is a waiver of the right to insist on a forfeiture of wages because of such misconduct. Likewise voluntary payments for time when the employee was absent because of sickness precludes the right to deduct therefor on final settlement.⁸⁶

5. BENEFIT AND RELIEF FUNDS. In connection with many enterprises employing a large number of laborers is an employee's relief association for their benefit in case of sickness or injury, usually supported in part from deductions from the wages of the employees and voluntary contributions by the employer.⁸⁷ Generally only employees of the company are entitled to membership,⁸⁸ the deduction by an authorized agent of the master of dues from the servant's wages being held an acceptance of the application for membership.⁸⁹ Usually the rules of the association provide that the servant renounces all claims for damages against the master where he accepts relief from the fund,⁹⁰ and that the right to participate in the relief fund is forfeited by the recovery from the employer of damages for personal injuries.⁹¹ So generally the rights of the servant cease on his leaving the master,⁹² but such a provision does not preclude liability for a death benefit where the employee was in fact dead when the notice of discharge was sent to him.⁹³ Acquiescence in the deduction of a certain sum per month for the fund and giving a receipt each month for wages in full, especially where the employee has accepted allowances from the fund, precludes him from thereafter recovering such deductions.⁹⁴ Where the fund is contributed entirely by the employer, any rules which he makes regulating the disposition thereof are binding on the employee so that he has no rights therein except as provided for by such rules.⁹⁵

6. MEDICAL ATTENDANCE.⁹⁶ Except where provided for by contract,⁹⁷ an employer is not bound to provide a servant with medical attendance,⁹⁸ unless the employer

A judgment on demurrer is not a judgment in a suit against the employer for damages which will preclude any claim on the relief fund, within a rule of the company, since the judgment intended by such a rule is a judgment awarding the employee some damages.

was paying nothing for the services of the servant,⁹⁹ at least except in a case of great emergency where it is imperative to save life or to prevent great harm.¹ The employer is not liable for medical attendance even where the employee was injured in the course of his employment so as to make the employer liable for the injuries.³ By contract, however, the employer may be bound to furnish medical attendance,³ as where the employer retains a portion of the wages of each employee for medical services.⁴ And in such a case the employer is liable to the employee in damages for failure to properly provide medical attendance in case the employee is sick or injured.⁵ Independent of contract, a physician cannot recover from an employer for services rendered an employee,⁶ even where the services have been requested by the employer,⁷ except perhaps where the servant performs his services without compensation,⁸ or where the employer or someone authorized to act in his behalf promises to pay for the services, or requests them where it is his duty to furnish medical attendance.⁹

Damages.—Where an employee is improperly refused admission to the hospital of the employer, he may recover the cost of such skilled surgical treatment and accommodations as he would have received had he gone to the hospital; but where the employee, instead of employing medical attention, accepted the services of the local surgeon of the employer, the employer is not liable for any aggravation of his injury by the failure of that surgeon to give him proper treatment, as he should have procured aid elsewhere. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Gheen, 112 Ky. 695, 66 S. W. 639, 68 S. W. 1087, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1952. Where medical assistance is refused, the employee is entitled to recover for both physical and mental suffering. But damages suffered by reason of the employee being compelled to walk from the place where he was taken sick to his home, by reason of his lack of funds to pay railroad fare, and the employer's refusal to transport him, are not recoverable, since too remote. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Rubio, (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 65 S. W. 1126.

Continuance of the medical attention so long as the sickness or injury requires it is necessary, in the absence of any understanding to the contrary; and the employee is not bound by rules adopted by the employer after he entered the employment, and shortly before the injury and not within the knowledge of the employee, to the effect that the treatment would continue so long as the surgeon deemed necessary and that benefits would not be given for injuries received in a fight. Scanlon v. Galveston, etc., R. Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1905) 86 S. W. 930.

Free transportation.—The duty to furnish free medical attendance may include the duty to furnish free transportation to the employer's hospital, where such free transportation is the custom of the employer; and the employee is entitled to damages for increased suffering due to the refusal of the employer's foreman to wire for a free pass to the hospital, where it was his duty so to do. 8. PAYMENT¹⁴—a. Time When Due.¹⁵ Except where regulated by statute,¹⁶ the time when wages are payable is to be determined by the original contract of hire¹⁷ or subsequent agreements.¹⁸ But a wrongful discharge renders the wages already earned at once due and payable.¹⁹ The right to monthly payments, as provided for by the contract, is not waived by neglecting to demand the wages each month.²⁰ Under an employment by the day, week, or month, for no fixed time, with no agreement as to the time of payment, the wages are due at the close of each day, week, or month, as the case may be.²¹ If neither the amount of wages nor the time of payment are specified the wages do not accrue monthly.²² It has already been stated that a contract to work for an entire number of months at a specified sum per month is an entire contract;²³ and it follows that where there is no agreement as to the time when the monthly wages are payable they are not ployee for board where the latter agreed to serve for his board but instead sued for the value of his services and recovered therefor by default of the employer in defending); Nichols v. Coolahan, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 449 (holding, where one agreed to pay an employee so much per month and board, and no charge was made for time while the employee was sick, that the employer could not recover for board of the employee while sick); Spencer v. Storrs, 38 Vt. 156 (holding that, where one agreed to work for his board and clothes, and worked for some six months until the fall of the year and received board, but no clothes, the employee could recover the reasonable value of the services because of the breach for failure to furnish clothes for the winter); Griffin v. Tyson, 17 Vt. 35 (holding that, where the employee is to be boarded by the employer in a particular way or at a particular place, the employee has no right to procure his board in a different way in a place not designated and charge the employer therefor, without showing some failure of performance on the part of the employer).

Board of children of servant.—Where a woman worked as housekeeper, without any express agreement as to wages, but with the understanding that she should be entitled to free board for her son, and brought with her two sons who were boarded by her employer, he had a right to offset against her claim for wages a reasonable amount for the board of her second son. Fletcher v. Massey, 49 Ill. App. 36.

Board while sick.—Where a servant contracted to work for a certain sum per month and board, and was sick so as to be unable to work for a few weeks, during which time no charge was made for services, the master cannot charge the servant for board during the sickness. Nichols v. Coolahan, 10 Metc. (Mass.) 449.

Time of payment indefinite.—Where one was employed as care-taker of a mine, one half of his wages to be paid at the end of each month and one half when the mining company should resume work or dispose of its property, it was an implied condition that operations should be resumed or the property sold within a reasonable time, so that the employee could recover the balance after the lapse of four years, although work had not been resumed nor the property disposed of. *Hood v. payable until the end of the term.²⁴ It has been held that an agreement to pay a yearly salary is simply an agreement to pay so much for services by or for the year, and does not mean that the amount is to be paid at any particular time, in the absence of any usage or understanding, express or implied, to that effect.²⁵ Failure, through sickness, to fully perform the contract precludes the right to payment for the services actually performed before the end of the term.²⁶

b. Satisfaction. What constitutes a payment²⁷ or an accord and satisfaction²⁸ of a claim for wages is governed by the rules generally pertaining thereto. Dealings between the employer and his agent, where the employee is not actually paid, do not relieve the employer from liability.²⁹ If payments of wages have been made on account, and thereafter the employee quits before the expiration of the term, and is defeated in an action to recover for his services, the employer cannot recover the amount of the part payment previously made.³⁰

9. ACTIONS³¹—a. Nature and Form of Remedy. Whether an action to recover compensation shall be based on the contract itself or on a quantum meruit depends on the principles governing actions on contracts in general.³² An action for an accounting is usually not maintainable.³³

b. Conditions Precedent. The service upon the employer of a notice of the particulars of the employee's claim is, where provided for by contract, a condition precedent to an action for wages.³⁴ So a certificate of a third person may constitute a condition precedent,³⁵ although a recovery is permissible notwithstanding a failure to furnish a certificate where it is unreasonably withheld.³⁶

c. Time to Sue.³⁷ Where a contract for services for a specified time calls for periodical payments of instalments, each instalment constitutes a separate cause of action which accrues immediately after the instalment is due.³⁸ But where the employee quits before the end of the term,³⁹ or is discharged for cause,⁴⁰ and no wages are then due, he cannot recover compensation pro rata or on a quantum meruit until the wages are due and payable under the contract. So where the amount of profits of which the employee was entitled to a certain per cent cannot be ascertained, according to the terms of the contract, until the termination of the year, and the employment is terminated before, no action can be brought to recover such percentage before the close of the year.⁴¹ Where wages are to be paid from time to time as needed by the employee, who hired for a year, and he quits before the end of the year, he may sue at once to recover the actual value of the labor.⁴² If a contract for a year is terminable at the option of either party, with a provision for payment when the services are completed, an action may be brought at once after termination before the end of the year.⁴³ Where the employee quits for cause he may at once sue for his compensation.⁴⁴

d. Defenses—(1) IN GENERAL. Certain defenses to actions for compensation for services have been already noticed.⁴⁵ The following have been held not defenses: Work unskilfully done where the servant was employed by the day;⁴⁶ employee lazy, and failure to produce good results;⁴⁷ failure of employer to have the expected work to do, where the employee was not discharged and was always ready to perform his duties;⁴⁸ order given to employee, on employer, although not returned, where it had not been accepted or paid;⁴⁹ order given employer by employee directing payment to third person where no payment had been made and the order was still in the employer's possession;⁵⁰ work in which employee was engaged being performed for the employer by a third person, under contract, where the employee was not hired by the third person;⁵¹ services rendered as the employer's mistress where the employer had induced her to believe that she was his wife.⁵² It is a defense that the servant falsely and fraudulently represented that

(II) SET-OFF AND COUNTER-CLAIM. An employer sued for services rendered may set off damages incurred by him because of the failure of the employee to exercise due care and use reasonable skill in his work,⁵⁴ from quitting before the end of the term,⁵⁵ from quitting without giving the required notice,⁵⁶ from sickness of the servant during the term,⁵⁷ or from misconduct in the course of his employment,⁵⁸ or a fine properly imposed by the employer.⁵⁹ So if an employee is discharged for cause the employer may set off damages from the acts justifying such discharge,⁶⁰ but not damages arising from a failure to complete the services unless the acts justifying the discharge were voluntary and wilful breaches of the contract.⁶¹ If the employee quits pursuant to an option to do so contained in the contract, no damage resulting therefrom can be set off.⁶²

e. Parties. The rules relating to parties in actions on contracts in general apply equally well to actions for compensation for services.⁶³

Damages not resulting from negligence cannot be recouped. Goss v. Runner, 29 Nebr. 481, 45 N. W. 778.

Liability to third persons.—In an action for wages it is no defense that the employee has by negligently injuring a third person exposed the employer to liability for damages, unless the employer has actually paid, or has been adjudged liable to pay, damages. Merlette v. North River, etc., Steamboat Co., 13 Daly (N. Y.) 114.

Damages equal to, or in excess of, wages.—The damages may be set off, although they exceed the amount of wages earned. Glennon v. Lebanon Mfg. Co., 140 Pa. St. 594, 21 Atl. 429, 12 L. R. A. 321. And, if the facts justify, the employer may recover a judgment for the excess. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Clanton, 59 Ala. 392, 31 Am. Rep. 15; South Chicago City R. Co. v. Workman, 64 Ill. App. 383.

Acquiescence of employer.—If the employer is present and sees the quality of the work being done by the employee, he must pay the stipulated wages so long as he continues the employment, and he cannot set up the plea of bad work or recoup for damages on that ground. Starke v. Crilley, 59 Wis. 203, 18 N. W. 6. But see Morris v. Redfield, 23 Vt. 295.

Damages.—The employer may recoup damages to the extent of injury actually sustained by him by the conduct of the employee; and it is not sufficient to allow the employer as damages simply what it would cost to procure another one in his place, although the damages must not be so uncertain and indefinite in their character that no estimate can be made of their amount. *Satchwell v. f. Pleading—(1) COMPLAINT.⁶⁴ A complaint in an action to recover compensation for services must clearly set forth all the facts to show the existence of a cause of action.⁶⁵ As in all actions on contracts, the complaint must show a binding agreement between the parties.⁶⁶ Performance of the services sued for must be distinctly alleged,⁶⁷ and it must appear that the services were tiff was not a party to the contract, was not consulted, and did not consent to it. Millani v. Tognini, 19 Nev. 133, 7 Pac. 279.

Joinder of plaintiffs.—Persons contracting severally to perform certain services for another, at an agreed price per day, cannot join in an action to recover for their services. No. 5 Min. Co. v. Bruce, 4 Colo. 293. An accepted proposal made to the workmen in a foundry collectively, by a partner therein, that if they will go to work his firm will pay them the amount due from a former proprietor is a promise to each of them individually, upon which separate actions only will lie. Wills v. Cutler, 61 N. H. 405. See also CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 704.

Defendants.—Where one is employed by a firm for a period of years, and agrees to act for them and their successors under their direction and control, and the firm is dissolved before the end of the term, and the employee continues in the service of the successors, it is not necessary to join as defendants, in an action on the contract for wages earned, after the dissolution, the members of the new firm who were not parties to the written agreement. Smith v. Douglass, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 191.

Co., 24 Utah 1, 66 Pac. 360 (holding that it was proper to allege an agreement to pay certain wages fixed in an adjustment agreed upon after the contract was entered into, although the original contract sued upon provided for the payment of what the services were worth); Littlefield v. William Bergenthal Co., 87 Wis. 394, 58 N. W. 743 (holding that a complaint was not bad because of failure to state when the employment began, where it set forth the written contract of a certain date providing that defendant "agrees to employ, and does hereby employ" plaintiff for one year, although no time for the services to begin was fixed).

If a substitution of employers is alleged it must be averred that the employee assented thereto. Chapin v. Longworth, 31 Ohio St. 421.

Quantum meruit.—In an action to recover for services as a housekeeper it is proper to show the character and the quality of the services rendered, by an averment of services rendered for an inmate of the house other than defendant. Berry v. Collins, 9 Ohio Cir. Ct. 656, 6 Ohio Cir. Dec. 597, where the servant was employed to build and run a cotton factory under a contract by which for the first year he should make his wages as low as possible, after which and when the factory went into operation he was to be paid according to the profits, there is no such special contract as precludes a recovery on a quantum meruit and to require the contract to be set up. Norment v. Hull, 1 Humphr. (Tenn.) 320.

Prayer for relief.—A complaint setting forth the agreement for a share of the profits and demanding judgment that an account be taken and that defendant pay the amount found due plaintiff states a cause of action for the amount of the unpaid compensation, notwithstanding the prayer for relief is applicable to an equitable action which is not maintainable. Parker v. Pullman, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 505, 53 N. Y. Suppl. 839.

Where payment is to be made in a share of the crop, an allegation that defendant did not, at the close of the year, pay plaintiff such part of the crop made on the plantation, after setting forth what crop was made, is good after verdict. Laughlin v. Flood, 3 Munf. (Pa.) 255.

Sufficiency of allegations.—An averment that plaintiff performed all the conditions of the contract so far as defendant permitted is a sufficient averment of performance unless the complaint is attacked by motion. Culbertson Irr., etc., Co. v. Wildman, 45 Nebr. 663, 63 N. W. 947. So averments showing that plaintiff entered defendant's employ under a contract at a specified time and continued therein during a specified period are a sufficient averment of performance. Joy v. Glidden Varnish Co., 83 Fed. 90.

Construction of allegations.—Where an employee sued for unpaid salary up to the time of the insolvency of the employer, which occurred before the end of the term of hiring, an allegation that the employee had duly performed all the conditions of the contract on his part must be construed to allege performance only during the time for which he sued. Tichenor v. Bruckheimer, 40 Misc. (N. Y.) 194, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 653.

Part performance.—A contract to serve for a year on a monthly salary does not oblige the employee to aver and prove performance of the whole year's services, or that he was prevented from performing, as a condition precedent to a recovery. Matthews v. Jenkins, 80 Va. 463. See also supra, III, B, 4, c, (1).

requested.⁶⁸ Where the contract does not specify the nature of the services to be rendered they need not be specified in the complaint.⁶⁹ A demand for payment need not be averred.⁷⁰

(II) ANSWER.⁷¹ An answer is sufficient where it specifically denies the agreement alleged in the complaint;⁷² but if there is no denial, it is not sufficient to merely set up a version of the transaction inconsistent with that set up in the complaint.⁷³ The answer is sufficient where it alleges a discharge and states the grounds therefor.⁷⁴ Statutory defenses must be specially pleaded.⁷⁵ If a set-off is relied on there must be a special plea.⁷⁶ Failure to allege payment does not rebut the presumption that wages of a menial servant were periodically paid.⁷⁷

(III) REPLY. A reply must not contain material allegations inconsistent with the allegations of the complaint.⁷⁸

(IV) ISSUES, PROOF, AND VARIANCE—(A) In General. The evidence must correspond with the allegations in the pleadings.⁷⁹ For instance, if the complaint is for the recovery of wages, under a special contract, damages for breach of the contract cannot be proved.⁸⁰ So, if a full performance of the contract is averred, evidence of an excuse for non-performance is inadmissible.⁸¹ And if an express contract is alleged, evidence is not admissible to show an implied contract.⁸² Where the answer denies the contract sued on, and alleges payment, a discharge for intoxication cannot be shown.⁸³

(B) Evidence Admissible Under General Issue.⁸⁴ Under the general issue, evidence is admissible to show a good cause for discharge,⁸⁵ or a breach or failure of performance of the contract by the employee,⁸⁶ or employment by a third person during the time for which the employee sues to recover wages.⁸⁷

tract by engaging in other employment while defendant was entitled to his services. Seaburn v. Zachmann, 99 N. Y. App. Div. 218, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 1005.

Subsequent agreement as to wages.—Evidence of an agreement as to the rate of wages after the contract of hire was entered into does not constitute a variance because the action is on the contract and the agreement for the rate of wages was made thereafter. Sandberg v. Victor Gold, etc., Min. Co., 24 Utah 1, 66 Pac. 360.

87. Phinney v. Bronson, 43 Kan. 451, 23 Pac. 624.

g. Evidence — (i) PRESUMPTIONS.⁸⁸ Services performed by an employee at the request of the employer will be presumed to have been done in the course of his employment, although not technically in the line of his duty.⁸⁹ So, where the services are rendered by one in the employ of another, even upon request, it will be presumed that they were rendered under the contract of employment unless the contrary is shown.⁹⁰ It will be presumed that the contract is to be performed in the state where it is executed,⁹¹ and that where the relation of employer and employee is shown to exist the employment continued to the end of the term.⁹² But evidence of payment for certain periods of service will not raise a presumption of payment for prior periods of service, where time has intervened between the periods of service.⁹³ And an unusual contract, such as an agreement to work a year for a certain sum per day with payment at the end of the term, is not to be presumed.⁹⁴ The rule in England that where one serves in the capacity of a domestic servant and no demand for wages is made until a considerable period after the termination of the services, it will be presumed either that the wages have been paid or that they were gratuitous,⁹⁵ has been followed in this country in some of the states.⁹⁶

(ii) BURDEN OF PROOF. The burden is on the employee who sues to recover compensation for his services to establish the terms of the contract on which his right to recover depends.⁹⁷ So where the employee seeks to recover for a period when he was not working, the burden is on him to show his right to recover therefor.⁹⁸ And where an employee holds over after the term, the burden is on him to prove that he performed the services under an express or implied contract that he was to receive the original rate of compensation,⁹⁹ although if the employee

St. 31 (holding that the presumption is not affected by a statute making servant's wages for one year a preferred claim against a decedent's estate); Hayes' Estate, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 412.

To whom presumption applicable.—The presumption of payment for domestic services applies, not only to domestics living in the house of the employer, but also to persons rendering domestic services, but not living in the employer's house. Hayes' Estate, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 412. Where decedent's house was a small country tavern, whose patrons were very few, one who was employed by the decedent to work about the house, do the cleaning, tend bar, cook, and all such other necessary things, including the washing and ironing, and serving drinks in the parlor, was a servant, and not a housekeeper, so as to raise the presumption that she had been paid periodically. Taylor v. Beatty, 202 Pa. St. 120, 51 Atl. 771.

Rebuttal of presumption.—The presumption that a decedent regularly paid a woman who did his washing and ironing and rendered him other domestic services, but who did not live in the same house with him, is not rebutted by the claimant's declarations to third persons that she made frequent demands for money, and that the decedent refused to pay her the amount she asked for, and by the account-book of the decedent, which was not a full record either of his receipts or disbursements, but which contained occasional charges against the claimant. Hayes' Estate, 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 412.

The rule cannot be invoked where the head of a house assumes relations of intimacy with his servant, and takes her out riding, and by what he says and does indicates an intention to marry her. Schrader v. Beatty, 206 Pa. St. 184, 55 Atl. 958.

97. Leveridge v. Lipscomb, 36 Mo. App. 630 (holding that where plaintiff alleged a hiring for no definite time, and the answer alleged a hiring for a definite time, not fulfilled by the employee, the burden was on plaintiff to prove the hiring for no definite time, since the defense was merely a denial); *Fell v. continues to render the same services the presumption that the services were continued under the original contract will shift the burden of proving the contrary on to the employer.¹ On the other hand, if the employer sets up a new contract superseding the original one, on which the employee sues, the burden of proving the new contract and performance thereunder is on the employer.² If the employer seeks to recoup damages by reason of the employee's quitting before the end of the term, the burden is on the employer to prove the damages;³ but where the employer sets up a counter-claim for moneys lost by the employee, and the employee alleges that the loss was not through his negligence, the burden of showing the absence of negligence is on the employee.⁴ If an employee without means delays for a considerable time in bringing suit and in bringing the case to trial, especially where the services cover a period of years, the burden is on him to explain his neglect in failing to enforce the payment of his wages.⁵

(III) ADMISSIBILITY—(A) In General. Generally speaking, evidence of any facts which are logically relevant and material to a fact in issue is admissible.⁶

1. Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Parker, 92 Md. 22, 47 Atl. 1042.

2. Lyman v. Schwartz, 13 Colo. App. 318, 57 Pac. 735; Pitstick v. Osterman, (Iowa 1897) 73 N. W. 587, holding, however, that if the new contract is based on a condition which the employer refuses to perform, the employee can recover on the original contract.

3. Asher v. Tomlinson, 60 S. W. 714, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1494.

4. Becket v. Iowa Imp. Co., 67 Iowa 337, 25 N. W. 271.

5. Taylor v. Beatty, 202 Pa. St. 120, 51 Atl. 771.

6. See cases cited infra, this note.

To whom services were rendered.—In an action for services rendered as employee of defendant, an award and judgment thereon in favor of plaintiff against a third person, for the same services, should have been admitted in evidence as tending to show that the services in question were not rendered defendant. De Forrest v. Butler, 62 Iowa 78, 17 N. W. 177.

Nature of services.—The fact that an employee is designated as a housekeeper does not preclude extrinsic evidence for the purpose of raising a presumption, in an action for wages, that periodical payments of wages have been made, and that she is in fact a servant and not a housekeeper. Taylor v. Beatty, 202 Pa. St. 120, 51 Atl. 771.

Change of employer.—Where the employee alleges want of notice in the change of employers, evidence of the method of paying the men prior to the date of the change is admissible as well as the method after such date. Tousignant v. Shafer Iron Co., 96 Mich. 87, 55 N. W. 681. Where an employee was to receive the same wages from the successor of his original employer as he was entitled to under the original employment, but the wages under the original employment were in dispute, evidence as to the previous employment is inadmissible. Ganther v. Jenks, 76 Mich. 510, 43 N. W. 600.

Contingent salary.—Where the amount sued for was to be paid only on condition that the employer's business was prosperous, evidence was admissible to show that his business resulted in loss, the amount of such loss, and from what it resulted. Diffin v. Reid, 15 Misc. (N. Y.) 268, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 407.

Extra time.—Evidence that the master's agent told plaintiff that he would receive compensation for overtime is admissible to negative any waiver by plaintiff of his right to such compensation, although the agent had no authority to make any contract with plaintiff. O'Boyle v. Detroit, 131 Mich. 15, 90 N. W. 669.

To show the sums received by an employee for his employer, the opinions of witnesses of the annual value of the work done, where the employee was charged with the collection of the accounts contracted in the business, is not admissible. Hale v. Brown, 11 Ala. 87.

Payment.—Where payment is alleged, evidence is admissible to show that the employer stated after the completion of the services that he would pay the employee a specified sum. Murphy v. De Haan, 116 Iowa 61, 89 N. W. 100. Where payment is alleged, checks received by the employee, some payable to him personally and some on account of the business, are admissible in evidence to show that his personal account was kept separate from the labor expense account. Miller v. Brown, 82 Iowa 79, 47 N. W. 895.

Commissions on shares of profits.—Where an employee was to be paid according to the amount of goods sold during the year, evidence of the amount of sales in immediately preceding years and in the year in question down to his dismissal, being the best evidence procurable under the circumstances, is not so speculative and remote as to be inadmissible. Kauffman v. Mendelsohn, 24 Misc. (N. Y.) 182, 52 N. Y. Suppl. 631. Where commissions were to be paid if the yearly sales of the store exceeded a certain sum, and the employee, for a part of the time, was not given an opportunity to examine the sale slips, and the cash proceeds of the sales were not all the time kept separate on the employer's books but were combined with those received from other sources, the employee may introduce evidence comparing the amount of business during the months of which no record was kept of the amount of sales, with certain months in which a record had been kept. Parrott v. Jacobson, 27 Wash. 265, 67 Pac. 589. Where the wages were to be estimated according to the profits, and the books were kept by plaintiff and a fellow employee, and it was claimed that the employer acquiesced in the entries therein, the employer may show in contradiction of his assumed acquiescence what was said to the fellow employee who made the entries, such employee having been asked upon the stand as to the conversation, and denied that there was such conversation. Tuthill v. Smith, 88 N. Y. Suppl. 942.

(B) Existence and Terms of Contract. Where the issue is as to the existence or terms of the contract, any legal evidence is admissible to show the existence or non-existence of the contract or what the contract really was.⁷ Evidence of the value of the employee's services, irrespective of the contract, is admissible where there is an issue as to the wages agreed upon, as such evidence tends to show whose contention is properly correct.⁸ So, as bearing upon such issue, evidence of other independent contracts between the same parties for like services is admissible,⁹ as is a bill previously paid the employee by the employer for like services at the rate which the employee contends was agreed upon,¹⁰ or evidence of what the employee was receiving as wages from a third person whose service he left to become the employee of defendant.¹¹ So evidence of how the employee came to work for the employer and of his employment by it prior and up to the time of the contract is admissible as part of the history of the transaction and explanatory of what followed.¹² But evidence that the employee, about the time of the hiring, offered to work for a third person at the price which the employer contends was agreed upon, is immaterial.¹³ So evidence of custom is inadmissible

By whom employed.—Admissibility of evidence on issue as to whether plaintiff was employed by defendant or by one for whom defendant acted see McDonald v. Wesendonck, 30 Misc. (N. Y.) 601, 62 N. Y. Suppl. 764.

7. See Hammond v. Hammond Buckle Co., 72 Conn. 130, 44 Atl. 25; Higgins v. Shepard, 186 Mass. 57, 70 N. E. 1014; Abbott v. Andrews, 130 Mass. 145 (evidence held not inadmissible as evidence of an offer to compromise); Bannon v. Harris, 24 N. Y. App. Div. 557, 49 N. Y. Suppl. 935; McDonald v. Alexander, 35 Misc. (N. Y.) 279, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 813 (evidence held admissible to contradict employee as to reason why his board was agreed to be paid by the employer in addition to his regular wages).

Parol evidence.—The general rule of parol evidence to vary the contract applies. Taylor v. Enoch Morgan's Sons' Co., 48 Hun (N. Y.) 483, 1 N. Y. Suppl. 293 [affirmed in 124 N. Y. 184, 26 N. E. 314]. See also EVIDENCE, 17 Cyc. 567 et seq.

Reduction of salary.—In the absence of evidence that it had been intimated to plaintiff that his salary would be reduced, evidence of the amount of sales and of the embarrassed condition of defendant's business during the time it was claimed his salary was a certain sum per month is inadmissible. Paulsen v. Schultz, 85 Cal. 538, 24 Pac. 1070.

Where defendant denies any contract of employment, he cannot show what wages were paid to other employees. Williams v. Williams, 82 Mich. 449, 46 N. W. 734.

Holding over.—Parol evidence is admissible to rebut the presumption that services rendered after the expiration of a contract of hiring were on the same terms as the original contract. Hale v. Sheehan, 41 Nebr. 102, 59 N. W. 554.

Renewal of contract for specified time.—Where the issue is as to whether the contract of hire was verbally renewed for a year, evidence of conduct of the employee entirely inconsistent with the claim that he had bound himself for another year is admissible. Segler v. Bernstein, 82 N. Y. App. Div. 267, 81 N. Y. Suppl. 1082.

Former adjudication.—Evidence as to the amount of compensation agreed upon is inadmissible where in conflict with facts decided by a former judgment between the same parties concerning the same subject-matter. Menage v. Rosenthal, 175 Mass. 358, 56 N. E. 579. But where a former action for wages under the same contract was settled, but it does not appear for what sum, the proceedings in that action are not evidence in the second action on the same contract as to the rate of compensation agreed on between the parties. Briggs v. Smith, 4 Daly (N. Y.) 110.

8. Rosenberg v. Heidelberg, 98 N. Y. App. Div. 17, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 684; Knallakan v. Beck, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 117. See also CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 767 note 74.

9. Rosenberg v. Heidelberg, 98 N. Y. App. Div. 17, 90 N. Y. Suppl. 684.

Terms of contract at beginning.—Where the issue is as to whether the contract was for stipulated wages or for what the services were reasonably worth evidence is admissible to show what the contract was at the beginning, although it does not cover the period for which the suit is brought. Mears v. O'Donoghue, 58 Ill. App. 345.

10. Glucose Sugar Refining Co. v. Flinn, 184 Ill. 123, 56 N. E. 400.

11. Roeco v. Parczyk, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 328.

12. Selley v. American Lubricator Co., 119 Iowa 591, 93 N. W. 590.

13. Roles v. Mintzer, 27 Minn. 31, 6 N. W. 378.

to show that certain kinds of contracts were usually made in the business in the neighborhood.¹⁴

(c) Breach of Contract. In an action to recover compensation for services, evidence is admissible to show that the employee quit before the end of the term,¹⁵ and as to whether the quitting was in good faith where the employee was given the option to leave in good faith.¹⁶ Any legal evidence is admissible to show non-performance of the contract on the part of the employee.¹⁷

(d) *Reasonable Value of Services.*¹⁸ In an action on an express contract for a fixed salary, evidence of the reasonable value of the services is inadmissible,¹⁹ except where the wages provided for by the contract are incapable of estimation,²⁰ or where the terms or validity of the contract is in issue, in which case the evidence is admissible for consideration if it becomes necessary to base the claim on a quantum meruit.²¹ If the action is based on a quantum meruit, account-books are admissible to explain the nature and show the extent of the services performed in keeping them.²² So, where it is alleged that the employer agreed to pay what he could afford to pay for managing the business, evidence of the value of the services, considering their nature and the profits of the business, is admissible.²³

14. Smith v. Sheridan, 57 Hun (N. Y.) 585, 10 N. Y. Suppl. 365; Kosloski v. Kelly, 122 Wis. 665, 100 N. W. 1037. See, generally, CUSTOMS AND USAGES, 12 Cyc. 1088.

15. Doerr v. Brune, 56 Ill. App. 657; Goldstein v. White, 16 N. Y. Suppl. 860.

Evidence to rebut ground for quitting.—In an action for wages, a master cannot, for the purpose of justifying his treatment of his servant, introduce evidence of information received by him from a third person about the servant's conduct. Chapman v. Coffin, 14 Gray (Mass.) 454.

16. Wilmington Coal Min., etc., Co. v. Barr, 2 Ill. App. 84.

17. See Pungs v. American Brake-Beam Co., 129 Mich. 318, 87 N. W. 364.

Devoting time and attention to business.—On an issue as to whether an employee devoted his time and attention to the services of his employment, according to his best knowledge and ability, as called for by the contract, evidence is inadmissible to show that he sold a far less amount of goods than the other salesmen in his department. Greene v. Washburn, 7 Allen (Mass.) 390.

Negligence.—Where the employer introduces a counter-claim for negligence, but presents no evidence to show want of due care, testimony as to statements by the employee that he performed certain acts which would show due care is immaterial. Rawlings v. Clark, 19 Colo. App. 214, 74 Pac. 346.

Misconduct not connected with employment.—Questions to show the bad conduct of an employee, not connected with the subject of his employment, are properly excluded. Macdonald v. Garrison, 2 Hilt. (N. Y.) 510.

Embezzlement.—The embezzlement by the employee of money from the business, amounting to more than the unpaid wages, may be shown, to prove that the services sued for were worthless and injurious. Schoenberg v. Voigt, 36 Mich. 310.

Faithfulness.—Where an employee agrees to labor faithfully for defendant's interests, evidence that he told co-employees that they would not get their pay and that he did not expect to get his was inadmissible, in the absence of any showing that the men quit or that defendant was injured by such declarations. Eckelund v. Talbot, 80 Iowa 569, 46 N. W. 661.

Skillfulness of employee.—See Koehler v. Buhl, 94 Mich. 496, 54 N. W. 157.

Rebuttal.—Where defendant interposes a counter-claim based on certain acts claimed to constitute negligence, evidence that defendant had himself performed like acts is admissible on the question of negligence. Rawlings v. Clark, 19 Colo. App. 214, 74 Pac. 346. Where the employer introduces evidence to show that the servant was unable to render efficient physical service because of an injury, the servant may show in rebuttal a letter written by the employer stating that the servant had a thorough knowledge of the business, as tending to show that the services of the servant were valuable notwithstanding his disability to perform severe physical labor. Lalor v. McDonald, 44 Mo. App. 439.

20. Kent Furniture Mfg. Co. v. Ransom, 46 Mich. 416, 9 N. W. 454.

21. Hammond v. Hammond Buckle Co., 72 Conn. 130, 44 Atl. 25; Butcher v. Auld, 3 Kan. 217. See also Sands v. Potter, 165 Ill. 397, 46 N. E. 282, 56 Am. St. Rep. 253, holding that the giving evidence in rebuttal to show the reasonable worth of the employee's services does not waive his right to recover the contract price thereof.

22. Crusoe v. Clark, 127 Cal. 341, 59 Pac. 700.

23. Philliber v. Edelblute, 188 Pa. St. 468, 41 Atl. 643.

But evidence that the business had largely increased during the period of the alleged employment of plaintiff as manager is inadmissible, where it is not shown that the increase was due in whole or in part to his services.²⁴ In determining the value of the services rendered after the employer had told the employee that the former price for his work was not to be paid, evidence as to the cause of the employer's inability to pay the former wages is immaterial.²⁵ Where an employee abandons the service before the end of the term, his stipulated yearly salary is not evidence of the value of his services for the time while he worked.²⁶ The relevancy of evidence to show the value of personal services in general is treated elsewhere.²⁷

(iv) WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence in an action by an employee to recover compensation for services is governed by the general rules of evidence which have been discussed elsewhere.²⁸ A prima

Performance of services in general.—Ashland Land, etc., Co. v. May, 59 Nebr. 735, 82 N. W. 10.

Consent to employee's quitting.—Hogan v. Titlow, 14 Cal. 255, holding that slight evidence of assent, or an agreement to apportion the contract, on the part of the employer, is sufficient to permit a recovery, where the employee has quit before the end of the term.

Reason for discharge.—St. Kevin Min. Co. v. Isaacs, 18 Colo. 400, 32 Pac. 822.

Payment.—Caldwell v. Caldwell Co., 47

facie case is made by proof of the rendition of services on property owned by defendant,²⁹ or evidence of an employment at stipulated wages and the rendition of services.³⁰

h. Questions For Jury—(1) IN GENERAL. Questions of fact arising in an action for compensation for services are for the jury,³¹ as where the facts are to be determined from conflicting evidence.³² Where the existence or the terms of a contract, and not its validity or construction, is in issue, and the evidence is conflicting, or the question depends on the intention of the parties, the question of the existence or terms of the contract is one for the jury.³³ So where an employee holds over after the term the question whether such continued service is of a character different from the original is for the jury.³⁴ But the reasonableness of a provision of a contract is a question of law for the court.³⁵

Misc. (N. Y.) 599, 94 N. Y. Suppl. 476, holding that proof that an employee stated that during his employment he drew moneys "from time to time as shown by" an account produced as a counter-claim does not amount to proof of an admission of the correctness of the account.

30. Moyle v. Hocking, 10 Colo. App. 446, 51 Pac. 533.

31. See, generally, TRIAL.

Rules of employer as binding.—It is a question for the jury whether the contents of the rules of the employer in possession of the employee were known to the employee (Bradley v. Salmon Falls Mfg. Co., 30 N. H. 487), as is the question whether rules posted about the premises of the employer became part of the contract of hiring so as to bind a person entering the service with knowledge of the regulation (Dean v. Wilder, 65 N. H. 90, 18 Atl. 87).

Notice of change of employers.—Whether the employee had notice of a change of the employment is for the jury. Jones v. Shafer Iron Co., 96 Mich. 98, 55 N. W. 684.

Rescission or modification of contract.—Where there is any evidence to support the inference of the employee's assent to the rescission of the contract it should be submitted to the jury. Vanuxem v. Bostwick, 4 Pa. Cas. 532, 7 Atl. 598. So where a proposition for reduction of salary has been made by the employer, and a counter proposition is made by the employee, it is a question for the jury whether the contract has been modified. American Lamp, etc., Co. v. Baldwin, 12 Ohio Cir. Ct. 403, 5 Ohio Cir. Dec. 228.

Enlargement of employment.—Where defendant employed plaintiff to furnish plans for machinery for a cotton mill, and superintend its construction, and a letter of plaintiff accepting the employment was ambiguous in its terms, but both parties acted in pursuance of this contract, and the scope of plaintiff's employment was subsequently enlarged, and, on settlement, he claimed more than the amount of compensation at first agreed, it was held that the questions whether the larger employment was within the terms of the contract, and whether plaintiff has estopped himself to deny that fact by his own ambiguous letter, were for the jury. Hill v.

What is reasonable compensation to the employee, when the contract authorizes him to charge what he sees fit, is a question for the jury. Van Arman v. Byington, 38 Ill. 443.

The time when payment should be made for services, where the contract is silent in regard thereto, is a question for the jury. Thayer v. Wadsworth, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 349.

Damages.—It is proper to refuse to submit issues raised by a plea in reconvention for damages where the evidence furnishes no basis for measuring and computing such damages. Shute v. McVitie, (Tex. Civ. App. 1903) 72 S. W. 433.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 121. See also CONTRACTS, 9 Cyc. 776.

New contract of hiring.—Where the salary book of the employer, under an entry of an employee's name, contained an item specifying a yearly salary at a certain sum, and on the line below an entry fixing an increased salary and dated less than a year after the first entry, and the employee continued in the employment for several years thereafter, the question whether a new hiring for a year commenced on the anniversary of the date of the second entry is for the jury. Western Manufacturers' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Boughton, 37 Ill. App. 183 [affirmed in 136 Ill. 317, 26 N. E. 591].

34. Ewing v. Janson, 57 Ark. 237, 21 S. W. 430.

35. Wilson v. Lyle, (Pa. 1888) 12 Atl. 365.

(II) PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT. Performance of the contract by the employee, where the evidence in regard thereto is conflicting, is a question for the jury.³⁶ So the question whether services sued for were accepted by the employer as a full performance or only as all that he could get toward a performance is for the jury.³⁷ And the question whether acquiescence in the manner of performance of the work precludes the right to deduct for imperfections therein is ordinarily one for the jury.³⁸ Whether a certain absence of the employee for several days, as shown by uncontroverted evidence, is a breach of the contract, is a question of law for the court;³⁹ but where an employer told an employee called away by illness in his family that his wages would continue while absent the question as to how long he could remain away with pay, as dependent on the intent of the parties, is one for the jury.⁴⁰ The existence of justification for quitting is for the determination of the jury,⁴¹ as is the negligence of the employee in the performance of his duties.⁴²

(III) WAIVER. Whether an employee waived his right to additional compensation by accepting a smaller sum, under protest, is a question for the jury,⁴³ as is the question whether the acceptance of services after the termination of a notice to quit is a waiver of the notice.⁴⁴

i. Instructions. The necessity for, and propriety of, instructions to the jury are governed by the rules relating to instructions in civil actions generally,⁴⁵ such Discharge of employee.—Where the facts are undisputed, and amount to a legal justification for the discharge of a servant, the court should so charge the jury. Von Heyne v. Tompkins, 89 Minn. 77, 93 N. W. 901, 5 L. R. A. N. S. 524. A charge that a discharge was wrongful if the employee was properly performing his duties at the time of his discharge is erroneous, in the absence of a showing that prior violations of the contract by the employee had been condoned. Moynahan v. Interstate Min., etc., Co., 31 Wash. 417, 72 Pac. 81. See, generally, Mee v. Bowden Gold Min. Co., 47 Ore. 143, 81 Pac. 980; Mudgett v. Texas Tobacco Growing, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 149.

Misconduct preventing recovery.—In an action for wages it is error to charge without qualification that plaintiff's drunkenness while off duty would not be such misconduct as would prevent a recovery, since such misconduct might incapacitate for work; or to charge in regard to misconduct of one employed as a teamster that reckless driving and using the team for other people's work will not prevent the recovery of wages, unless such conduct is "general, or frequent, or habitual." Ulrich v. Hower, 156 Pa. St. 414, 27 Atl. 243.

Excuse for quitting.—Where an employee has abandoned his contract on the ground of ill usage, and seeks to recover on a quantum meruit, the jury should not be charged that "if they believe the fact of ill usage made out, plaintiff was entitled to recover," but they should be instructed that if the conduct of the employer justified the employee in quitting the employment he was entitled to recover. Erving v. Ingram, 24 N. J. L. 520.

Incompetency or negligence.—An instruction that, if defendants knew that plaintiff was incompetent any time during the nine months he was in their employ, their business was to make it known to plaintiff, is erroneous, as implying that if they overlooked such infraction, plaintiff would be secure in his employment. Koehler v. Buhl, 94 Mich. 496, 54 N. W. 157. An instruction that the employer cannot recover from an employee for damages to, or destruction of, machinery by the employee, unless occasioned by the negligent or wrongful act of the employee, is proper. Brewer v. Wright, 25 Nebr. 305, 41 N. W. 159.

Continuance of business.—Where an employee was to receive an increase in salary if the employer continued in the manufacturing business, after the original term of employment, an instruction that if "with the knowledge of plaintiff," the making of certain additional implements by the employer after the term was an experiment, it would not be a continuance of the manufacturing business, was proper. Whitworth v. Brown, 85 Wis. 375, 55 N. W. 422.

as that they must be applicable to the issues⁴⁶ and to the evidence,⁴⁷ and must not be confusing,⁴⁸ or misleading,⁴⁹ or assume as a fact a matter in dispute.⁵⁰ Where an instruction is given stating the law as applicable to the contention of one party, a request by the opposing party to charge a correct rule of law stating the converse of the proposition should be granted.⁵¹ An instruction, although correct as an abstract rule, should be modified to correspond to the circumstances of the particular case, where such circumstances take the case out of the general rule.⁵² A charge that there is no evidence of a hiring for a year should not be given where both parties understood that it might continue a year, and the compensation is fixed at a definite sum per year.⁵³

j. Damages and Amount of Recovery—(1) IN GENERAL. The measure of damages for a breach of a contract of employment is the damages resulting as the natural and necessary result of the breach.⁵⁴ Where the employer wrongfully refuses work and the employee is without means, the latter may recover damages for his suffering.⁵⁵ Prima facie the amount recoverable in an action for wages is the wages fixed by the contract,⁵⁶ although in case of part perform-attention to his own affairs with defendant's consent, but not so as to take up time which should have been devoted to defendant's business, such acts were not breaches of plaintiff's contract, is proper, where instructions have been given for defendant that if plaintiff neglected defendant's business to attend to his own it was a breach of the contract. Biest v. Versteeg Shoe Co., 97 Mo. App. 137, 70 S. W. 1081.

Amount recoverable.—Where the employer agreed to hire a hand for the employee if the latter would leave his crop and perform the services, an instruction, where there is no agreement as to the price to be paid for the services, that the employee cannot recover a greater sum than necessary to hire such a hand, is improper. Graves v. Graves, 70 Ark. 541, 69 S. W. 544. Where an employee claims to have rendered services under a special contract at a stipulated price per month, and the answer thereto is merely a general denial, it was proper to charge that if the contract was made and plaintiff performed labor thereunder he was entitled to recover the contract price for the time he actually served. Skeels v. Storm Lake Electric Light, etc., Co., (Iowa 1900) 81 N. W. 688. In an action where an employer sought to recoup damages resulting from negligence of the employee, it is proper to instruct that plaintiff would only be liable for the damage which followed or resulted to defendant as the natural and proximate result or consequence of the negligence, and that the measure of damages would be the cost of repairing machinery claimed to have been injured, and place it in as good repair as it was immediately preceding such injury. Brewer v. Wright, 25 Nebr. 305, 41 N. W. 159.

Ruling rate of wages.—Refusal of an instruction limiting the value of services of a bookkeeper, and manager of his employer's business in his absence, to the "ruling rate of wages," generally paid for similar services, was proper; and so it is proper to refuse to instruct that the value of the services cannot in any degree be based on the wages for like

Extra pay.—Where four electric light companies contracted for the construction of an underground conduit, and engaged plaintiff to superintend the work, and he was already in the employ of one of the companies as engineer, an instruction, in an action by plaintiff for extra pay on account of such services, that if the jury believed from all the facts and circumstances that plaintiff, when he was appointed, did not intend to charge for his services, he could not thereafter change his mind and charge therefor, although the services were beneficial to defendant, was proper. Wagner v. Edison Electric Illuminating Co., 82 Mo. App. 287.

ance the recovery may be limited to the reasonable value of the services,⁵⁷ which, however, cannot exceed the pro rata contract price.⁵⁸ In an action by an employee for the wages fixed by the contract, the employer may recoup damages resulting from breaches of the contract by the employee;⁵⁹ but damages cannot be deducted as such where the action is to recover the reasonable value of the services.⁶⁰ Where the contract provides for its termination by the employer upon a specified notice, the employee is entitled to his salary only for the period of notice, on refusal of the employer to continue the employment.⁶¹

k. Judgment. The general rule that the judgment must accord with and be warranted by the pleadings⁶⁴ is applicable;⁶⁵ and hence in an action on a special contract there can be no recovery upon a quantum meruit,⁶⁶ especially where the judgment is by default.⁶⁷ So a judgment for less than, or in excess of, what is warranted by any evidence, is voidable.⁶⁸ And if defendants are sued jointly on the ground that the services were performed at their joint request, no judgment for plaintiff employee can be rendered where it is not shown that one of the defendants requested the services.⁶⁹ Ordinarily no judgment for the value of serv-

A. 826, holding that it will be presumed that the servant earned and deserves the contract price for the time his services continued, until the contrary is shown by evidence to sustain a properly pleaded counter-claim.

Employment of servant to take place of discharged servant.—No damages the employer has suffered by employing another to take the place of an employee discharged on account of his bad conduct should be deducted from the value of his services, since the employer has himself chosen to prevent the continuance of the labor under the contract. It is only when the employee has intentionally and wilfully conducted himself in such a manner as to render it necessary that he should be discharged that he is required to pay other damages than the loss of his agreed compensation. *Lawrence v. In Illinois a traveling salesman is not a "laborer or servant" within the statute (Standard Fashion Co. v. Blake, 51 Ill. App. 233); and such pleas should not be allowed in the absence of a showing required by the statute (Rowland v. Records, 43 Ill. App. 198), it being necessary that the jury specially find that the amount sued for is "earned and due" and is for the wages of such servant (Great Northern Hotel Co. v. Leopold, 72 Ill. App. 108).

In Ohio a demand for payment of the wages is a condition precedent to a recovery for attorney's fees either before a justice of the peace or on appeal from his decision to the common pleas. Gasser v. Nash, 2 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 86.

Suppl. 526 (holding that in an action to recover wages judgment for damages for wrongful discharge cannot be rendered). See also Paul v. Minneapolis Threshing Mach. Co., 87 Mo. App. 647.

Statutory actions.—But in an action brought under a statute giving the right to body execution against the employer in an action for wages, a judgment for work, labor, and services is recoverable, notwithstanding the employee fails to show what the statute requires, since the statute does not give a new cause of action but merely a new remedy. *Wah Kee v. ices can be rendered in the absence of evidence as to the value thereof,⁷⁰ or at least for no more than a nominal sum.⁷¹ If the contract calls for stock of a corporation in payment of wages a judgment for the value thereof is proper where the employer refuses to deliver the stock.⁷² Affirmative relief to defendant cannot be granted unless prayed for by a proper plea.⁷³ In some states the judgment must state that it is for a particular class of services in order to prevent the employer from claiming exemptions against it.⁷⁴

1. Appeal and Error. The rules regulating the decisions of appeals in civil actions in general apply to appeals from a judgment in an action to recover compensation for services.⁷⁵

10. LIENS AND PREFERENCES⁷⁶ — a. Creation and Existence in General — (I) AT COMMON LAW. At common law a servant has no lien for his compensation.⁷⁷ Independent of statute or a contract provision for a lien, he is not authorized to take or retain property of his employer until his wages are paid,⁷⁸ nor is he entitled to a lien on a manufactured article which is in part the product of his labor.⁷⁹ However, if the workman is in fact a bailee rather than a servant he has a common-law lien.⁸⁰

(II) STATUTORY PROVISIONS. The statutes in many of the states expressly provide for a lien or preference in favor of a servant to protect his claim for wages.⁸¹ These statutes vary greatly in their terms, and while some of them pro-

In Washington, under 2 Ballinger Annot. Codes & St. § 5902, giving any person who clears realty at the owner's request a lien thereon for the labor performed, a party who clears land under contract with the owner has a lien thereon for the work performed, if he has not waived it, although no lien was referred to in the agreement. Stringham v. Davis, 23 Wash. 568, 63 Pac. 230.

vide for a lien enforceable against the property of the employer independent of his insolvency, the majority of them provide for a preference for claims for wages for work performed before the seizure of the employer's property on process or the suspension of his business by the action of creditors or before his property is, by any other means, put in the hands of a receiver or trustee.⁸² Such statutes should be liberally construed in favor of the servant,⁸³ and are generally held constitutional.⁸⁴ The statutes should not be given a retroactive effect unless they expressly provide therefor.⁸⁵ The right to a preference in the distribution of assets of the employer in bankruptcy proceedings,⁸⁶ in insolvency proceedings in general,⁸⁷ in assignment for the benefit of creditors,⁸⁸ or in the distribution of the proceeds of an execution sale⁸⁹ is treated elsewhere, as is the priority of claims against the estate of a deceased person.⁹⁰

b. Nature of Claim Secured—(i) PERSONAL LABOR. The statutes are generally construed as intended to protect only claims for actual work or labor performed by the employee personally,⁹¹ and hence contractors are not pro-

Bailee's lien.—A statutory provision giving a lien to a bailee for hire who makes, alters, repairs, or improves an article, authorizing him to retain possession until his charges are paid, does not create a lien in favor of a person who performs services with reference to personal property in his possession as a mere servant. Michaelson v. Fish, 1 Cal. App. 116, 81 Pac. 661.

Construction and validity of particular statutes in general see Lupton v. Hughes, 2 Pennew. (Del.) 515, 47 Atl. 624 (conflict in statutes); Small v. Hammes, 156 Ind. 556, 60 N. E. 342 (validity).

Voluntary sale.—In Pennsylvania, where laborer's claims are entitled to a preference in the distribution of the proceeds of a sale of property by execution or otherwise on account of the death or insolvency of the employer, it is held that a voluntary sale by an insolvent employer in payment of his debts is not such a sale as is contemplated by the statute which is intended to embrace only judicial sales. Wilkinson v. Patton, 162 Pa. St. 12, 29 Atl. 293. The contrary rule prevails in Indiana where it is held that a lien of a laborer is superior to the rights of a purchaser from an insolvent debtor to pay debts due the purchaser where the business of the debtor is suspended by such act. Bass v. Doerman, 112 Ind. 390, 14 N. E. 377; Bell v. Hiner, 16 Ind. App. 184, 44 N. E. 576. And see Lupton v. Hughes, 2 Pennew. (Del.) 515, 47 Atl. 624. In Florida persons entitled to liens for wages, whether in possession or not, may enforce them against purchasers with notice. St. Augustine First Nat. Bank v. Kirkby, 43 Fla. 376, 32 So. 881.

Evidence of insolvency.—The fact that the debts of a master largely exceed the proceeds of the sheriff's sale of property seized on execution is sufficient evidence of insolvency to permit an employee to assert his lien. Torpy v. Webster, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 475.

Specific lien.—Where an employee is given a right to a preference in the proceeds of a forced sale of the property of his insolvent employer, there is no specific lien on the property in the hands of the owner or his vendee. Wilkinson v. Patton, 162 Pa. St. 12, 29 Atl. 293. See also People v. Remington, 45 Hun (N. Y.) 329 [affirmed in 109 N. Y. 631, 16 N. E. 680].

Brown*, 141 Cal. 93, 74 Pac. 548, holding that the fact that a laborer makes an entire contract for the service of himself and his team does not deprive him of a right to a lien for his own labor where its value can be distinguished from the amount due for the services of the team.

Interest which has accrued on a claim for wages before the lien attaches is not embraced within the lien. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Oxford Iron Co., 33 N. J. Eq. 192.

When wages earned.—Under the New Jersey statute giving laborers in the employ of an insolvent corporation at the time of its insolvency a lien for the whole amount of wages due them, it is immaterial how long tected.⁹² Claims for the use of teams⁹³ or machinery,⁹⁴ or for the hire of other property of the employee,⁹⁵ or for expenses incurred by the employee,⁹⁶ in connection with the labor, are not protected. So in some states the statute only protects wages for a specified time preceding the actual sale and transfer of the property on account of the insolvency of the employer;⁹⁷ and the amount of the claim of the laborer which is entitled to a preference is sometimes limited by statute.⁹⁸

(II) WAGES AS DISTINGUISHED FROM SALARIES, FEES, ETC. Where the lien or preference is confined to one working for wages, it has been held that a person employed on a salary or on commission is not protected;⁹⁹ nor is an attorney whose claim is for fees,¹ or one carrying on an independent business.² So a claim for damages for breach of contract is not a claim for wages due.³ But it has been held, under one statute, that it is immaterial whether the compensation is by the day, week, or month, or by piece, weight, or measurement.⁴

c. Character of Business in Which Services Performed. The statutes often-times limit the lien or preference to employment in particular kinds of business.⁵ In some states the labor must have been performed in connection with the business in which the insolvent employer was engaged,⁶ and contribute to the permanent and continuous use of the particular business,⁷ so that services contributed to the construction and equipment of such work or business are not entitled to a preference.⁸ Employees of a contractor or log jobber have been held not protected because the employer was not engaged in a permanent and continuing business such as contemplated by the statute.⁹

d. Servants Protected by Statutes — (I) IN GENERAL. The statutes in the different states vary to a considerable extent in their enumeration of the classes of persons entitled to a lien or preference.¹⁰ And in many of the states the statutes before the date of the insolvency the wages may have accrued. Delaware, etc., R. Co. v. Oxford Iron Co., 33 N. J. Eq. 192.

Labor discontinued before end of contract. — Where the property on which the work is being done is sold on judicial sale during the term of employment it would seem that the amount of the lien is the amount due as wages at the time of the sale. Scarborough v. Stinson, 15 La. Ann. 665.

In Pennsylvania, under the act of 1872 giving a lien to clerks, miners, etc., employed in any works, mines, manufactories, "or other business," it was held that the latter phrase merely referred to places of employment similar to those mentioned, and did not include a hotel. Allen v. Fehl, 33 Leg. Int. 366. But by the act of 1883 and its amendment in 1891 the words "other business" are extended so as to include all kinds of business in which any of the classes of employees named in the act are engaged. have been from time to time enlarged in this respect by amendments so that decisions under earlier statutes should be carefully read in connection with subsequent statutes.¹¹ A person cannot have a laborer's lien for work done by others hired by him;¹² and it is almost universally held that a contractor is not entitled to a preference or a lien,¹³ even though he performs manual labor in part.¹⁴ In some states the employee, to be entitled to a preference, must have been an employee at the time of the suspension of business.¹⁵

(II) LABORERS. A laborer has been defined as one who labors in toilsome occupation—a man who does work that requires little skill as distinguished from an artisan.¹⁶ The term cannot be confined, however, to one who performs only

In Florida, under a statute giving to bookkeepers, clerks, agents, porters, and other employees, a lien for wages, a timekeeper who had to attend to a commissary and also one contracting to haul logs to the mill of the employer at so much a day with his own team are entitled to liens on the product of the mill. St. Augustine First Nat. Bank v. Kirkby, 43 Fla. 376, 32 So. 881.

In Indiana a general manager of a shop is not entitled to a lien under the statute giving a lien to mechanics and laborers employed about any shop. Raynes v. Kokomo Ladder, etc., Co., 153 Ind. 315, 54 N. E. 1061.

In Louisiana it has been held that a foreman has no privilege (Lewis v. Patterson, 20 La. Ann. 294; Lauran v. Hotz, 1 Mart. N. S. 140), nor has a teacher (Labat v. Labat, 2 Mart. N. S. 652), nor laborers employed in a sawmill at daily or monthly wages (Barbour v. Duncan, 17 La. 439), nor an engineer (McRae v. His Creditors, 16 La. Ann. 305).

In New York a statute providing that "the wages of employes, operatives and laborers" of an insolvent corporation shall be preferred to other creditors applies only to subordinate laborers, and does not entitle to preference, on account of services, either a bookkeeper, draughtsman, superintendent, or foreman working for a monthly salary, payable at the end of each month, although they also perform manual labor. Wakefield v. Fargo, 90 N. Y. 213; In re New York Locomotive Works, 73 Hun 327, 26 N. Y. Suppl. 209.

In Pennsylvania a salesman paid by commissions on accounts sold by him is not a miner, mechanic, clerk, or laborer, even though he performed occasional services as clerk or superintendent. Willauer's Estate, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 533. So laundrymen carrying on an independent business are not "tradesmen" within the meaning of the statute. Steininger v. Butler, 5 Pa. Dist. 43, 17 Pa. Co. Ct. 97.

In Washington manual labor incidentally performed by the general manager of a corporation with the expectation of reward by increased profits is not within the statute. Addison v. Pacific Coast Milling Co., 79 Fed. 459.

An attorney at law is not a clerk, servant, or employee. Lewis v. Fisher, 80 Md. 139, 30 Atl. 608, 45 Am. St. Rep. 327, 26 L. R. A. 278.

A driver of a milk wagon, one who helped in loading milk at a creamery and washed the milk cans, bottles, etc., and one who worked about the creamery, are laborers. Wilbur v. Hankins, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 222.

In Michigan a statute gives a preference to "debts owing for labor." Under such statute it has been held that one employed to adjust and start machinery in mills supplied with machinery by the employer, and to services that require no skill.¹⁷ Except where specially defined by statute,¹⁸ the term "laborer" has been held to include a mechanic who performs actual manual labor for his employer,¹⁹ and a bar-tender who is also required to keep books.²⁰ The following have been held not laborers within the statutes: Superintendent of employer;²¹ a professional chemist;²² a bookkeeper;²³ officers of the employer corporation;²⁴ a farm overseer;²⁵ a clerk who does not perform manual labor;²⁶ salesmen paid by commissions;²⁷ an architect's draftsman;²⁸ or a civil engineer.²⁹

17. Heckman v. Tammen, 184 Ill. 144, 148, 56 N. E. 361 [affirming 84 Ill. App. 537]. In this case the court used the following language: "That in their employment they had acquired and used skill would not render the designation of 'laborer' inapplicable. They labored with their hands for their employer for wages, and were clearly laborers within the meaning of the statute. To so construe the statute as to limit its benefits to mere menial servants performing the lowest forms of labor requiring no skill would, we think, do violence to the meaning of the act and leave the evil intended to be cured to remain in existence only slightly mitigated. While we are disposed to hold that the statute must be confined to those who perform manual services, still it cannot be confined to such services only that require no skill in the performance of them."

In New Jersey the term "laborer," as used in the wage-preference statute, is defined as including all persons doing labor or services of whatever character; and it has been held thereunder that the term as so defined includes a drayman (Watson v. Watson Mfg. Co., 30 N. J. Eq. 588) or a bookkeeper, although incidentally he is a director but with no pecuniary interest in the concern (Consolidated Coal Co. v. Keystone Chemical Co., 54 N. J. Eq. 309, 35 Atl. 157); but not the president of the employer corporation (England v. Beatty Organ Co., 41 N. J. Eq. 470, 4 Atl. 307), even in so far as he assists the manager at the request of the directors in conducting the business (Weatherby v. Saxony Wool Co., (Ch. 1894) 29 Atl. 326).

statute must be limited to "laborers," however, where the latter word is the only one used in the title of the statute.³² The term has been held to include a traveling salesman,³³ a bookkeeper,³⁴ and one employed to assist the general manager of a corporation in keeping its books, shipping goods, etc.;³⁵ but does not include a contractor³⁶ or an attorney at law.³⁷

(iv) OPERATIVES. The term, "operative" has no well defined meaning as distinguished from a laborer,³⁸ although it is more commonly used in connection with persons employed in manufacturing establishments. It does not include a secretary of a manufacturing company, although he acted as manager and superintendent and incidentally performed manual labor.³⁹

(v) CLERKS. The term "clerk" does not include a traveling salesman,⁴⁰ an attorney at law,⁴¹ or one employed in and about a pool-room to perform general work.⁴² An employer who lets out the services of a bookkeeper is not entitled to a preference for his wages, since the employer himself is not a clerk.⁴³

e. Inception and Duration of Lien. A lien attaches in some states as of the date of the performance of the labor,⁴⁴ so that, if the employer dies indebted, his estate in the hands of his personal representatives is charged with the lien.⁴⁵ But ordinarily where the employee is merely given a right to a preference in the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the property of an insolvent employer, there is no specific lien, at least not until the property is converted into money.⁴⁶ The statutes sometimes limit the duration of a lien to a specified number of days.⁴⁷ Of course the lien ceases after the employee has been paid.⁴⁸

f. Subject-Matter to Which Lien Attaches. The lien or preference attaches only to the property of the employer.⁴⁹ A chose in action has been held not subject to the lien,⁵⁰ while a trust estate has been held to be subject.⁵¹ In some states the lien has been confined to the production of the employee's labor.⁵² In other states where a preference is given in the proceeds of a sale of the employer's property, the property must be shown to have been used in connection with the business in the course of which the services were rendered.⁵³ If parcels of the property subject to the lien have been sold at different times they must be exhausted in the inverse order of alienation.⁵⁴

g. Assignment.⁵⁵ Where a lien for wages has attached it may be assigned by an assignment of the claim for wages;⁵⁶ and the assignee may assert the claim and enforce the lien in the same manner, and to the same extent, as the laborer.⁵⁷ But where a preference is secured by statute, in the proceeds of property of an insolvent employer, there is generally no lien before the employer's property is put into the hands of an officer, receiver, or assignee;⁵⁸ and hence where a claim for wages was assigned before such time the assignee has no lien.⁵⁹

h. Priorities.⁶⁰ The statutes in the several states differ so greatly in their terms that it is impossible to state any general rules as to the priority between a laborer's lien and other liens.⁶¹ In some states the laborers' claims have a preference, not only against unsecured claims but also against secured claims in existence before the laborer's claim.⁶² In such states the employee's lien has been held to be superior to a prior mortgage lien,⁶³ including a purchase-price mort-laborer who cuts and rakes it); Boyce v. Poore, 84 Ga. 574, 10 S. E. 1094 (holding that a "special" lien of a laborer attaches only to the products of his labor).

What constitutes assignment.—The holder of orders given by an insolvent iron manufacturing company on a mercantile firm, to employees, in payment of wages, has no lien prior to that of mortgage bondholders, under Va. Acts (1878-1879), pp. 352, 353, which gives laborers who receive store orders for their wages a prior lien on the property of the company by which they are employed. *Philadelphia Seventh Nat. 1. Enforcement—(1) IN GENERAL.⁷⁰ The statutes, in so far as they provide for the protection and enforcement of employee's liens by affirmative acts of the employee, are to be strictly construed.⁷¹ The burden is upon persons claiming preferences to bring themselves within the statute.⁷² To protect the lien the employee is generally required to foreclose it within a certain time.⁷³ Where the

But see M. A. Furbush, etc., Mach. Co. v. Liberty Woolen Mills, 81 Fed. 425, construing Virginia statute.

After foreclosure.—The fact that a mortgage has been foreclosed, and execution levied, and the property redelivered to the mortgagor on the execution of a forthcoming bond, does not prevent a laborer's lien from attaching to the property notwithstanding the contract of labor was entered into after the redelivery of the property under the forthcoming bond. *Georgia Loan, etc., Co. v. In New Jersey, under a statute which gives an employee of an insolvent corporation a lien for his services on the assets of the corporation prior to any other debt of the company, it is held that a mortgage or other lien antedating the time when the court adjudges the corporation insolvent is entitled to priority as against the employee's lien, on the ground that the priority secured to laborers is a priority over the debts which are payable out of the corporation's property after the liens existing upon it at the adjudication of the insolvency are discharged. Wright v. Wynockie Iron Co., 48 N. J. Eq. 29, 21 Atl. 862; Hinkle v. Camden Safe-Deposit, etc., Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 333, 21 Atl. 861.

In Tennessee, under a statute making the employee's lien superior to all others, except liens to secure purchase-money and liens created before the passage of the act, an employee's lien for wages is entitled to priority over an attachment levied prior to the commencement of the employee's suit. *Ruston v. Process.—The process in a proceeding to enforce a laborer's lien under the act of 1870 should be made returnable to the proper court of the county of defendant's residence, if he resides in the state; and the issue made by property of the employer is in the hands of an officer, receiver, assignee, or other trustee, it is necessary for the employee to present and prove his claim to entitle him to share in the proceeds.⁷⁴ Where the proceeds of the property against which a statutory lien for wages exists in a sister state are paid into court, the rights of the laborer who has been interpleaded will be protected.⁷⁵

(II) NOTICE OF LIEN. In some states it is necessary to file a notice of claim or lien.⁷⁶ In other states the right to a preference is independent of the filing of any lien.⁷⁷

(III) PLEADINGS AND AFFIDAVITS—(A) Complaint. In an action to enforce an employee's lien, the complaint must clearly state the facts to bring the claim within the statute giving the lien or preference.⁷⁸ If the lien is given only where the wages are payable weekly or monthly, the facts showing such a contract must be stated.⁷⁹ Of course the complaint is defective where it merely alleges conclusions of law.⁸⁰

(B) Affidavit. In some of the states the lien may be summarily enforced by affidavit.⁸¹

74. See Duryee v. U. S. Credit System Co., (N. J. Ch. 1895) 32 Atl. 690.

75. Schuler v. T. M. McCord Co., 79 Minn. 39, 81 N. W. 547.

76. Donnan v. Shaw, 7 Pa. Dist. 605, 21 Pa. Co. Ct. 39; Seventh Nat. Bank v. Shenandoah Iron Co., 35 Fed. 436, holding that the time is not suspended by the pendency of a suit in which receivers have been appointed but is suspended by a decree of reference to a master to take an account of debts and their priorities against the employer.

Under the Illinois statute it is necessary, where the business of the employer is suspended or put in the hands of a trustee, by the acts of creditors, in order that debts for labor shall be treated as preferred claims, that a claim for wages be presented within ten days after seizure on execution or within thirty days after the property has been placed in the hands of a trustee; and when property has been seized on execution the claim must be presented within ten days after the seizure notwithstanding an assignment for the benefit of creditors is made within such ten days and the property is turned over to the attorney subject to the lien of the execution creditor. Columbia Hardwood Lumber Co. v. Brandenberger, 82 Ill. App. 327.

In North Carolina a laborer's lien filed after the employer's death, if otherwise sufficient in form and substance, is valid, although the employer is named in the caption instead of the administrator. Pugh v. Baker, 127 N. C. 2, 37 S. E. 82.

In Pennsylvania the kind of business in which an employer is engaged should be set forth in the notice of a claim for wages. Leinaw v. Albright, 10 Pa. Co. Ct. 171. See also EXECUTIONS, 17 Cyc. 1355.

In Virginia a memorandum of the amount and consideration of the claim, required to be filed within a specified time after the services are rendered, need not state that the services were rendered within a specified time. Overholt v. Old Dominion Mfg. Co., 98 Va. 654, 37 S. E. 307. But the mere recording of labor tickets within the specified time, with nothing to show that the wages were due on the day the tickets were dated, is insufficient, and the record cannot be supplemented by parol evidence in regard thereto after suit brought to enforce the lien. Liberty Perpetual Bldg., etc., Co. v. M. A. Furbush, etc., Mach. Co., 80 Fed. 631, 26 C. C. A. 38. If the claim is not filed within the ninety days after the completion of the contract it will not be severed and so much allowed as falls within ninety days before the notice. Fidelity Ins., etc., Co. v. Roanoke Iron Co., 81 Fed. 439.

Separate notice.—Under a statute giving a lien for wages, one hired for a year with wages payable monthly is not required to file a separate lien for the wages falling due each month. Mudgett v. Texas Tobacco Growing, etc., Co., (Tex. Civ. App. 1901) 61 S. W. 149.

78. Dano v. Mississippi, etc., R. Co., 27 Ark. 564 (holding that the property, and the nature of the estate therein, upon which the lien is claimed, must be averred); Sheeley v. Funderburk, 47 Ga. 287 (holding that a demand of payment of the exact sum due, and of a refusal to pay, must be averred); Bell v. Hiner, 16 Ind. App. 184, 44 N. E. 576 (holding that an allegation sufficiently showed the transfer of all the property used in the business of the employer). See Small v. Hammes, 156 Ind. 556, 60 N. E. 342.

79. Ackley v. Black Hawk Gravel Min. Co., 112 Cal. 42, 44 Pac. 330; Keener v. Eagle Lake Land, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 627, 43 Pac. 14; Kuschel v. Hunter, (Cal. 1897) 50 Pac. 397, holding that an allegation that claimant "agreed to do work by the month" at the "agreed rate of $100 per month" is not an allegation that the employer agreed to pay him monthly.

80. Weithoff v. Murray, 76 Cal. 508, 18 Pac. 435. See, generally, PLEADING.

81. See the statutes of the several states.

(IV) CLAIMS OF THIRD PERSONS. It has been held that a claimant of personal property, levied on in proceedings to foreclose a laborer's lien, cannot have the proceedings dismissed on the ground that they are irregular or invalid, but can merely move to dismiss the levy as to the property shown to be his.⁸²

(V) EVIDENCE. Ordinarily a person claiming a laborer's lien has the burden of proof.⁸³ If the lien is given only when the wages are payable weekly or monthly, he must show such fact.⁸⁴ The admissibility of evidence is governed by the rules relating to evidence in civil actions in general.⁸⁵

(VI) FINDINGS, JUDGMENT, AND EXECUTION. The rules relating to the construction and effect of findings in civil actions in general apply to actions to enforce a laborer's lien.⁸⁶ A stipulation for judgment for plaintiff on certain conditions authorizes a judgment against both defendants on the happening of such conditions.⁸⁷ The judgment in a foreclosure proceeding may be limited to a special judgment against the property.⁸⁸ Attorney's fees may be awarded by statute in some states.⁸⁹ The appointment of a receiver may be necessary to sell the property and distribute the proceeds.⁹⁰ The execution issued on an affidavit, in at least one state, operates as a final process until arrested by a valid counter affidavit raising an issue to be passed upon by the proper tribunal.⁹¹

j. Waiver and Forfeiture. The acceptance of a promissory note without security, for wages due, is not a waiver of the lien unless an intention to waive

In Georgia a general laborer's lien cannot be foreclosed upon realty by affidavit but only by action after properly recording the claim of lien; but it may be foreclosed on personalty by affidavit. Allred v. Haile, 84 Ga. 570, 10 S. E. 1095. The affidavit must allege that the work was done by plaintiff claiming such lien (Floyd v. Chess-Carley Co., 76 Ga. 752; Hoyt v. Glenn, 54 Ga. 571); that the service was that of a laborer (Hinton v. Goode, 73 Ga. 233; Richardson v. Langston, 68 Ga. 658); that the contract for labor was completed on the part of the laborer (McDonald v. Night, 63 Ga. 161; Dexter v. Glover, 62 Ga. 312; Brantley v. Raybon, 61 Ga. 211; Walls v. Rutherford, 60 Ga. 439), and that a demand for payment has been made of the debtor since the debt became due (Brantley v. Raybon, 61 Ga. 211). But it is not necessary to specify any particular items or articles of property. Allred v. Haile, 84 Ga. 570, 10 S. E. 1095. A laborer's affidavit alleging that affiant is "a laborer and mechanic, and that as such" he was employed "to work and labor" in a printing office is sufficient. Georgia Loan, etc., Co. v. Dunlop, 108 Ga. 218, 33 S. E. 882. An affidavit which alleges that affiant has a lien on defendant's property is sufficient where the execution is levied upon personal property only; and the fact that the clerk in issuing it inserted therein the words "lands and tenements" does not vitiate the execution as to the personal property. Dixon v. Williams, 82 Ga. 105, 9 S. E. 468. Affidavits to foreclose laborers' liens are filed when given to the clerk of the court, although he does not indorse an entry of filing thereon. Floyd v. Chess-Carley Co., 76 Ga. 752.

Counter affidavits.—Where a counter affidavit filed was invalid, it did not operate to convert the execution issued on the foreclosure into a mesne process returnable by the court, so that there was no suit pending and nothing to amend, and the court properly refused to consider the question as to the sufficiency of the levy of the execution. Moultrie Lumber Co. v. Jenkins, 121 Ga. 721, 49 S. E. 678.

Key*, (Miss. 1906) 39 So. 780, holding, in replevin, where it was prima facie shown that the property replevied was embraced in a trust deed in which plaintiff was the substituted trustee, that a laborer claiming the goods under his lien has the burden of proof to show that the trust deed did not embrace the property replevied.

such lien is clearly manifested.⁹² So the acceptance and negotiation of a draft given for wages is not a waiver where the servant obtains a return of the draft and offers to surrender it.⁹³ The right to a statutory lien, where inconsistent with the lien reserved by contract, will be presumed to have been waived and the contract lien substituted therefor.⁹⁴ Proving a claim in excess of that really due,⁹⁵ or presenting a claim embracing other items than wages,⁹⁶ does not work a forfeiture of the right to a lien for wages actually due.

IV. MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR INJURIES TO SERVANT.⁹⁷

A. Nature and Extent of Liability—1. IN GENERAL⁹⁸—a. Rule Stated.

The rule of law regulating the obligation between master and servant is that the former is liable for all accidents occurring in the course of the employment, which are not induced by the carelessness or improper conduct of the employee. In other words the master is bound to use reasonable care and diligence to prevent accident or injury, and if he does not he will be responsible for the damages.⁹

3. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Gormley, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 27 S. W. 1051.

The test of liability is the negligence of the master, not the danger of the employment, although the danger of the employment may help to determine the ordinary care required in the case. Knight v. Cooper, 36 W. Va. 232, 14 S. E. 999.

When life is at stake, the rule of diligence requires the doing of everything that gives reasonable promise of its preservation, regardless of difficulties and expense. Bessemer Land, etc., Co. v. Campbell, 121 Ala. 50, 25 So. 793, 77 Am. St. Rep. 17.

4. Protection for wrongful death see DEATH, 13 Cyc. 316.

Michigan.—Rick v. Saginaw Bay Towing Co., 132 Mich. 237, 93 N. W. 632, 102 Am. St. Rep. 422; Turner v. St. Clair Tunnel Co., 121 Mich. 616, 80 N. W. 720, 47 L. R. A. 112.

Minnesota.—Herrick v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 31 Minn. 11, 16 N. W. 413, 47 Am. Rep. 771. But compare Jones v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 80 Minn. 488, 83 N. W. 446, 49 L. R. A. 640.

Mississippi.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Harris, (1901) 29 So. 760. Compare Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Doyle, 60 Miss. 977, in which the omission of duty occurred in Mississippi, but the consequence was manifested physically in Tennessee, and it was held that the law of Tennessee governed.

Missouri.—Fogarty v. St. Louis Transfer Co., 180 Mo. 490, 79 S. W. 664; Williams v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 106 Mo. App. 61, 79 S. W. 1167; Benedict v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 104 Mo. App. 218, 78 S. W. 60.

New Hampshire.—Leazotte v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 70 N. H. 5, 45 Atl. 1084.

Texas.—El Paso, etc., R. Co. v. McComus, (Civ. App. 1903) 72 S. W. 629, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 170, 81 S. W. 760, in which the negligence took place in New Mexico, but the injury occurred in Texas, and it was held that the law of Texas governed. But see Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Thompson, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 658, 33 S. W. 718.

Utah.—Johnson v. Union Pac. Coal Co., 28 Utah 46, 76 Pac. 1089, 67 L. R. A. 506; Sartin v. Oregon Short Line R. Co., 27 Utah 447, 76 Pac. 219.

United States.—Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Babcock, 154 U. S. 190, 14 S. Ct. 978, 38 L. ed. 958; The City of Alexandria, 17 Fed. 390, in which the injury occurred on the high seas, and it was held that the rules of maritime law governed.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 137.

But see Pennsylvania Co. v. McCann, 54 Ohio St. 10, 42 N. E. 768, 56 Am. St. Rep. 695, 31 L. R. A. 651; Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Reagan, 96 Tenn. 128, 33 S. W. 1050.

6. See Morrisette v. Canadian Pac. R. Co., 76 Vt. 267, 56 Atl. 1102, where it was held that the fact that the law of Canada, where the injury was received, was contrary to the law of Vermont, did not show that it was so contrary to the public policy of the state that the courts would not enforce it.

a minor is employed in a business, the danger of which he is unable, by reason of his immature judgment, to comprehend, and is injured, the master is liable.¹⁵ That a minor answers falsely as to his age, and secures employment by so doing, in violation of a known rule against employing minors, does not make him a trespasser, or deprive him of his right to protection as an employee, when actually engaged in his employer's service.¹⁶

e. Delegation of Duty.¹⁷ As to the acts which a master or principal is bound as such to perform toward his employees, if he delegates the performance of them to an agent, the agent occupies the place of the master, and the latter is deemed present, and liable for the manner in which they are performed. This rule is as applicable to individuals as to corporations.¹⁸

f. Medical Attendance on Injured Servant.¹⁹ It is well settled that a master has performed his entire duty in respect to furnishing medical attention to a servant injured while at work, when he employs a person of ordinary competency and skill in the profession; and, having done so, he cannot be made liable for the carelessness or negligence of the person employed in the performance of his duties.²⁰ So too where a hospital is maintained by a master for the sole purpose of relieving injured servants, without any intention of profit to himself, he is not liable to his servants for the malpractice of the physician employed, if ordinary care was exercised in selecting him, although the hospital is supported by the contributions of the servants.²¹

2. RELATION OF PARTIES²²—a. Necessity of Relation of Master and Servant. Where, in an action for personal injuries, it is sought to charge one as master,

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 142.

Limitation of rule.—A railway company, running its trains over another road, is liable to its employees for the negligence of the servants of the licensing road in the discharge of the absolute duties of the master, but not for negligence in the discharge of their duties as servants. Brady v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 114 Fed. 100, 52 C. C. A. 48, 57 L. R. A. 712.

Although a foreman may be a fellow servant, yet when his negligence is in the failure to discharge a positive duty which the master owes to the subordinate servant, and which cannot be delegated, the fellow servant rule does not apply, and the master is responsible for the foreman's negligence. Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burgess, 108 Fed. 26, 47 C. C. A. 168.

Mere passive consent by a master that one servant direct another, when unaccompanied with a duty on the part of the latter to obey the directions given, will not fix liability on the master for negligent directions so given. Texas, etc., Coal Co. v. Manning, 34 Tex. Civ. App. 322, 78 S. W. 545.

The relation of master and servant does not exist between a master and a physician employed to care for men injured in his employment, so as to make the master liable for the physician's carelessness. He is not employed to do ordinary corporate work but to render services requiring special training, skill, and experience. Quinn v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 94 Tenn. 713, 30 S. W. 1036, 45 Am. See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 144.

The doctrine of respondeat superior applies only when the relation of master and servant is shown to exist between the wrong-doer and the person sought to be charged for the result of the wrong at the time and in respect to the very transaction out of which the injury arose. Higgins v. Western Union Tel. Co., 156 N. Y. 75, 50 N. E. 500, 66 Am. St. Rep. 537 [reversing 11 Misc. 32, 31 N. Y. Suppl. 841]. See also Roe v. Winston, 86 Minn. 77, 90 N. W. 122.

24. To show that the relation of master and servant exists, so as to render applicable the rule of law that the master must indemnify the servant, it must appear that the servant is acting at the time for and in the place of his master, in accordance with and representing his master's will, and not his own, and that the business which he is doing is strictly that of his master, and not in any respect his own. Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 71 Am. Dec. 63.

For the relation to exist, so as to make the master responsible, he must not only have the power to select the servant, but to direct the mode of executing, and to so control him in his acts in the course of his employment as to prevent injuries to others. Robinson v. Webb, 11 Bush (Ky.) 464 [approved in Quinn v. Kansas City, etc., R. Co., 94 Tenn. 713, 30 S. W. 1036, 45 Am. St. Rep. 767, 28 L. R. A. 552]. To the same effect see Andrews v. Boedecker, 17 Ill. App. 213; Wiltse v. State Road Bridge Co., 63 Mich. 639, 30 N. W. 370; Mound City Paint, etc., Co. v. Conlon, 92 Mo. 221, 4 S. W. 922.

The test is whether the person holding the position of master has the control over the servant in respect to the performance of his duties; and the right to employ and discharge the servant is an element tending to show a right to control. Roe v. Winston, 86 Minn. 77, 90 N. W. 122.

Power to discharge held the test see Pioneer Fireproof Constr. Co. v. Hansen, 176 Ill. 100 52 N. E. 17 [affirming 69 Ill. App. 659].

A general agent may be loaned or hired to a third party for some special service, and as to that particular service he will become the servant of the third party; the test is whether, in the particular service, the servant continues liable to the direction and control of his master, or becomes subject to the party to whom he is loaned or hired. Grace, etc., Co. v. Probst, 208 Ill. 147, 70 N. E. 12. See also Gagnon v. Dana, 69 N. H. 264, 39 Atl. 982, 76 Am. St. Rep. 170, 41 L. R. A. 389; Hardy v. Shedden Co., 78 Fed. 610, 24 C. C. A. 261, 37 L. R. A. 33. And see Higgins v. Western Union Tel. Co., 156 N. Y. 75, 50 N. E. 500, 66 Am. St. Rep. 537, where it is said that a servant employed and paid by one person may nevertheless be ad hoc the servant of another in a particular transaction, even when the general employer is interested in the work.

Manner of payment is a circumstance to be considered, but not the criterion. Corbin v. American Mills, 27 Conn. 274, 71 Am. Dec. 63. See also Tennessee Coal, etc., R. Co. v. Hayes, 97 Ala. 201, 12 So. 98, where it was held that the fact that plaintiff's name was not on defendant's pay-roll, and that he personally received nothing from it for his labor, was immaterial, where his father was entitled to, and did, receive the compensation for his work.

to lay down any definite and satisfactory rule applicable to all cases, and the question must be determined, as it arises, upon the facts and circumstances of the particular case.²⁵

b. Employment of Convict Labor.²⁶ Neither the state²⁷ nor its public officers²⁸ can be held liable by a convict for injuries received by him while employed during his confinement; but an individual or company which employs convict labor may be held liable;²⁹ and the fact that the convict is under the general charge of a state officer,³⁰ or that his wages go to the public,³¹ does not relieve the employer of liability.

c. Independent Contractors.³² Where the relation between the parties is that of contractor and contractee, and not that of master and servant, the contractee is not liable for injuries to the contractor's servants caused by the latter's negligence,³³ unless he has retained direction and control of the work,³⁴ or himself

g. Effect of Operation of Railroad by Receiver. A receiver operating a railroad under order of court, having exclusive control of the road and its agents and employees, is liable in his official capacity to his employees for injuries sustained through the negligent discharge of his duties by himself or his agents, in all cases where the railroad company, if it were operating the road, would also have been liable;⁶² and where he voluntarily assumes the management of other property over which the court has no control he is responsible individually for its careful and proper management.⁶³ A receiver is not a "proprietor, owner, charterer, or hirer of a railroad," within a statute giving a right of action for injuries resulting in death, caused by the negligence of such a person or his servants or agents.⁶⁴ It has been held, however, that a receiver is a person, within a statute which gave a right of action against any person or corporation through whose wrongful act or fault death resulted, if the injury would have given cause of action to deceased had he lived;⁶⁵ and where a receiver steps out of his proper function as receiver and engages in business foreign to the administration of the property in the court, he stands, as to such business and as to all persons employed by him or having business relations with him in the conduct of such foreign business, not as a receiver in the sense that he is therein an officer of the court, but as a party sui juris, acting as his own principal and upon his own responsibility.⁶⁶

3. SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT.⁶⁷ In order to render a master liable for personal injuries to his servant, the injuries must have been received in the line of the servant's duty, or, as usually expressed, within the scope of his employment;⁶⁸

expressly or impliedly, authorized to make the command or request.⁷¹ But the scope of a servant's duties is to be defined by what he was employed to perform, and by what, with the knowledge and approval of his master, he actually did perform, rather than by the mere verbal designation of his position; and where it is shown that the servants were in the habit of performing the work at which plaintiff was injured, he is not to be considered a mere volunteer.⁷²

5. CAUSE AND PROBABILITY OF INJURY⁹⁰—a. Proximate or Remote Cause. A master's liability for personal injury to a servant depends upon whether or not his negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.⁹¹ A master is not liable for injuries to a servant caused by a combination of several causes, where none of the alleged causes of the injury is alone sufficient to render him liable,⁹² or where the evidence does not show which of several possible causes, some of which do not involve negligence on the part of the master, produced the injury;⁹³ and the same is true where the cause of injury is purely conjectural.⁹⁴ But where the master's negligence is the efficient cause of the injury, he is liable, although his negligence is combined with some ulterior cause;⁹⁵ and the fact that the negligence of a third person contributes to that of the master in causing the injury is no defense, if the injury would not have occurred but for the master's negligence.⁹⁶ So too the fact that the injury might have occurred in the same manner in the absence of negligence on the part of the master is no defense where it was in fact caused by his negligence.⁹⁷

b. Accidental or Improbable Injury.⁹⁸ For an injury which results from pure accident, or from causes which could not be reasonably anticipated, unaccompanied by want of ordinary care on the part of the master, he is not liable.⁹⁹ But the fact that an accident was so unusual and extraordinary that it could not Wilful negligence is negligence so gross in character as to amount to recklessness, and to indicate a willingness to subject employees to a known or avoidable risk, and a failure to use ordinary care does not necessarily include the elements of wilfulness. Girard Coal Co. v. Wiggins, 52 Ill. App. 69.

6. PERSONS LIABLE⁴—a. In General. It may be broadly stated that in no case can the master be held liable for an injury to his servant, unless negligence or fault can be imputed to him.⁵

b. Joint and Several Liability.⁶ Where a servant is injured by reason of the concurrent negligence of several parties, they are jointly and severally liable.⁷

7. CONTRACTS AFFECTING LIABILITY⁸—a. Nature and Validity —(1) IN GENERAL. A contract between master and servant, before the happening of an injury, whereby the servant, in consideration of the employment, or of the wages, agrees to release and discharge his master from liability on account of injuries caused by the negligence of his master or of the latter's servants, is void as against public policy,⁹ especially where such contracts are forbidden by statute,¹⁰ or where the liability is of statutory origin.¹¹ It has been held, however, that in the absence of a statutory prohibition,¹² an express or sleeping car-company may, as a condition of employment, require an employee to release it from all liability, including indemnifying contracts with the railroads for negligence of its agents and servants

N. Y. 209, 26 N. E. 255, 21 Am. St. Rep. 736 [affirming 52 Hun 267, 5 N. Y. Suppl. 217], in which the contract was made after the service had begun, and was held void for want of consideration. The court declined to express an opinion as to whether the contract was against public policy.

Contra.—Mitchell v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 1 Am. L. Reg. (Pa.) 717, in which, however, the injury was due to the negligence of a fellow servant, and the validity of the contract seems not to have been questioned.

In Georgia a servant may assume all risks, save such as arise from criminal negligence (Fulton Bag, etc., Mills v. Wilson, 89 Ga. 318, 15 S. E. 322; Western, etc., R. Co. v. Strong, 52 Ga. 461; Western, etc., R. Co. v. Bishop, 50 Ga. 465); but any negligence, either of omission or commission, on the part of other servants of a railroad company, in connection with their business, from which injury results, constitutes criminal negligence, and a contract waiving a right to sue for injuries resulting therefrom is contrary to public policy (Cook v. Western, etc., R. Co., 72 Ga. 48).

Printed rules of a mining company, posted in the mine, warning workmen against risking themselves under bad roofs, and requiring them to ascertain whether places had been made safe before entering them, in so far as they can be claimed to operate as a contract against negligence, are void. Himrod Coal Co. v. Clark, 197 Ill. 514, 64 N. E. 282 [affirming 99 Ill. App. 332]. See also St. Louis Consol. Coal Co. v. Lundak, 196 Ill. 594, 63 N. E. 1079 [affirming 97 Ill. App. 109].

Waiver of liability for results of disobedience.—Where a railroad company by rule forbids its brakeman going between freight cars to couple them, and provides that coupling must be done by means of a stick, the company is not liable for the death of a brakeman who, in consideration of employment, signed a written recognition of such rule, waiving all liability of the company to him for any results of disobedience, when it appears that he understood what he was signing, and the company providing the necessary coupling stick. Russell v. Richmond, etc., R. Co., 47 Fed. 204.

—A contract between a street-car company and its servant, contained in a free pass ticket, limiting its liability for injuries received by him while riding to and from work on its cars is not against public policy. Peterson v. Seattle Traction Co., 23 Wash. 615, 63 Pac. 539, 65 Pac. 543, 53 L. R. A. 586.

10. N. C. Priv. Laws (1897), c. 56, § 2, providing that any contract, express or implied, made by any employee of a railroad company to waive the benefit of section 1 of such act, which gives him a right of action for injury caused by defective machinery or negligence of a fellow servant, shall be null and void, is constitutional. Coley v. North Carolina R. Co., 129 N. C. 407, 40 S. E. 195, 57 L. R. A. 817, 128 N. C. 534, 39 S. E. 43.

Mass. Pub. St. c. 74, § 3, which prohibits contracts between master and servant releasing the master from liability, is not contravened by an application for employment, by which the servant undertakes to make a careful examination of all things near to the railroad tracks, so that he may understand the dangers attending them. *Quinn v. and of other carriers. Contracts of this character, it is said, do not contravene public policy.¹³

(II) CONTRACTS PROVIDING FOR BENEFITS FROM RELIEF ASSOCIATION.

A contract whereby an employee agrees, on becoming a member of his employer's relief association, that the acceptance of relief therefrom, on being injured, shall bar his right of action against his employer for the injury, is not void as against public policy,¹⁴ nor for want of consideration or mutuality;¹⁵ and the acceptance of benefits under such a contract bars an action for damages.¹⁶ There is no waiver of any right of action that the person injured may thereafter be entitled to. It is not the signing of the contract but the acceptance of benefits after the accident that constitutes the release. The injured party therefore is not stipulating for the future, but settling for the past; he is not agreeing to exempt the company from liability for negligence, but accepting compensation for an injury already caused thereby.¹⁷

The acceptance by the wife of benefits due from a relief association after her husband's death through the negligence of the railroad company does not bar a recovery for such wrongful death for the decedent's child, under Burns Rev. St. Ind. (1894) § 285. Pittsburgh R. Co. v. Moore, 152 Ind. 345, 53 N. E. 290, 44 L. R. A. 638.

b. Construction and Operation. Contracts between master and servant affecting the master's liability for personal injuries will not, unless the intention to do so is manifest,¹⁸ be construed so as to give a right of action which would not otherwise exist,¹⁹ or to defeat a right which would exist but for the contract.²⁰ Where an injured employee agrees to accept a certain sum per week until he shall have sufficiently recovered to return to his work, in satisfaction of all claims for damages, the contract means that the payments shall not cease until he shall have sufficiently recovered to return to work of a similar character to that in which he had been engaged.²¹

c. Avoidance. It is no ground for the avoidance of a contract of release that the employee signed it without reading it or understanding its import, and that he was at a disadvantage in dealing with his employer, in the absence of any evidence of fraud, misrepresentation, or undue influence;²² nor, under a contract to elect between the benefits of a relief association and his right of action, can an employee who has accepted such benefits avoid the effect of such acceptance on the ground that he was not aware, at the time of receiving the benefits, of the strength of his case or of the witnesses by whom it could be established.²³

d. Waiver by Master. Where an employer enters into an agreement with his employer waiving all liability for injuries resulting from any infraction of a rule of the employer, an order by the employer's representative to the employee to disregard the rule is a waiver of the agreement.²⁴

B. Tools, Machinery, Appliances, and Places For Work²⁵ — 1. IN GENERAL — a. Rule Stated.²⁶ It is the positive duty of a master to furnish his servant with accept, by contract or mutual understanding, the burden of inspection or examination, of the appliances or places he is required to use, such as he is competent to make.³⁸

d. Failure to Furnish Tools or Appliances. It is actionable negligence on the part of a master to fail to furnish his servant with such tools and appliances as may be required for the reasonably safe prosecution of his work.³⁹ But to make out a case, it must be shown that such appliances were necessary,⁴⁰ and that none was at hand;⁴¹ and where the lack of them arises from a temporary condition in the progress of the work, caused by the negligence of fellow workmen, no liability attaches to the master.⁴² Nor is a master liable for a failure to furnish appliances to prevent an injury which could not be anticipated by the exercise of ordinary care and foresight.⁴³

2. NATURE AND KIND OF APPLIANCES AND PLACES — a. In General. It is sufficient if a master furnishes his servants with reasonably safe and suitable appliances and places, and he need not furnish the most expensive,⁴⁴ nor those of a particular pations attended with great and unusual danger there must be used all appliances readily attainable which are known to science for the prevention of accidents, and the neglect to provide such readily attainable appliances is proof of culpable negligence. Under this latter rule it is held that railroad companies are bound to avail themselves of all new inventions and improvements known to them, whenever their utility has been thoroughly tested and demonstrated.⁴⁸

(II) APPLIANCES AND METHODS IN ORDINARY USE. While not conclusive on the question of negligence,⁴⁹ evidence is generally admissible in an action for personal injuries to show whether or not the master's machinery, appliances, ways, and methods are such as are in ordinary and common use by others in the same business.⁵⁰ But customary negligence, either on the part of himself or others, is

b. Operation of Railroads⁵⁹—(i) EFFECT OF CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS. Constitutional and statutory provisions which compel railroad companies to receive and transport over their lines the cars of other companies, without delay or discrimination, do not require them to receive cars in an unsafe condition, or so defective in their construction as to make it dangerous for their servants to handle them, and do not relieve the receiving company from liability for injuries sustained by one of its servants from such defective cars.⁶⁰

(ii) CARS OF OTHER COMPANIES. While there are decisions to the effect that the responsibilities of a railroad company to its servants are the same in respect to cars of other companies which the servants are compelled to handle as in respect to its own,⁶¹ the better view seems to be that the duty of a railroad company in respect to a car received by it for transportation over its road, in the ordinary course of business, is one of inspection only, and that it is not to be held responsible for latent defects which cannot be discovered by such an inspection as the exigencies of traffic will permit in the exercise of a reasonable care.⁶² Where

(IV) RAILROAD TRACKS AND ROAD-BEDS. A railroad company, as between itself and its servants, must exercise reasonable and ordinary care and diligence to make its road safe, whether it owns the road or uses it under contract with the owner;⁶⁸ and where two or more companies use a track in common, it is, although the exclusive property of one of the companies, for the time being the track of each company using it, and the proprietary company is not liable to its servants for injuries caused by the negligent use of the track by the servants of another company.⁶⁹

(V) OBSTRUCTIONS ON, OVER, OR NEAR RAILROAD TRACKS. Where a railroad company permits an obstruction, of which it has actual or constructive knowledge, to remain on, over, or near its track, and by reason of such obstruction its servant is injured, the company is liable, although the obstruction belongs to or is under the control of a third person.⁷⁰

4. PARTICULAR APPLIANCES AND PLACES⁷¹ — a. In General — (i) DANGEROUS INSTRUMENTALITIES, PLACES, AND SUBSTANCES — (A) In General. Negligence cannot be imputed to a master merely by reason of the fact that the instrumentalities or places furnished by him are dangerous;⁷² but where the service required of a servant is of a peculiarly dangerous character, it is the duty of the master to make reasonable provision to protect him from the dangers to which he is exposed while engaged in the discharge of his duties.⁷³

(B) Explosives. The measure of care imposed on the master for the safety of his servant in the use of dynamite or other explosives is that ordinary care which reasonable and prudent men would and do exercise under like circumstances;⁷⁴ and where a master furnishes an explosive known to him to be dangerous and unsafe for the use to which it is to be put,⁷⁵ or which has never been used for

In determining the care and prudence a master must use in furnishing his servant with explosives for blasting, it may be considered how far such kind of explosives was in general use, and ordinarily considered safe and proper for the purpose, and how far the particular brand or manufacture of the explosives furnished was generally considered a safe article by those using it. *Adams v. the purpose, and is in fact unfit and unsafe therefor,⁷⁶ he is guilty of negligence. So too where a servant is injured by an explosion which is the necessary result of improper appliances the master is liable.⁷⁷

(II) HORSES AND VEHICLES.⁷⁸ Where the master knows or should know⁷⁹ that an animal used by him is vicious,⁸⁰ or that his harness or vehicle is not reasonably safe,⁸¹ he is liable for injuries to his servant caused thereby. So too a master must furnish a reasonably safe appliance for unloading a vehicle,⁸² and the master is also liable for injuries sustained by a servant through the premature starting of his team resulting from the master's negligence while the servant is in a dangerous position about the vehicle in the prosecution of his duties.⁸³

(III) *BUILDING AND PLACES FOR WORK*⁸⁴—(A) In General. Compare Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Patting, 86 Fed. 433, 30 C. C. A. 168, in which the violation of the statute neither caused nor affected the injury.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 209.

Statutory and common-law duties.—Mining companies are obligated to observe, not only the duties imposed by statute, but those which exist by virtue of the common law. Junction Min. Co. v. Ench, 111 Ill. App. 346.

The only matter of inquiry is whether the requirements of the statute have been complied with, and, if not, whether the injury complained of was caused by such neglect. Spiva v. Osage Coal, etc., Co., 88 Mo. 68.

The question of fellow servants is not involved in an action for injuries alleged to have been sustained through the violation of the mining act. Spring Valley Coal Co. v. Rowatt, 196 Ill. 156, 63 N. E. 649 [affirming 96 Ill. App. 248].

fulfilled when he furnishes them with suitable materials for the purpose;⁹⁹ nor does the general rule apply to a place which is constantly changing by reason of the work done.¹

(vii) ELECTRICAL APPARATUS AND STRUCTURES. Where a master employs electricity in his business he must exercise every reasonable precaution known to those possessed of the knowledge requisite for the safe treatment of electricity, to protect his servants from injury,² and must see to it that his poles and other places for work are in a reasonably safe condition.³ But as in other cases the master is not required to adopt a new device merely because it is new, where its practical utility has not been demonstrated.⁴

(viii) *SHIPPING.*⁵ Shipowners and others employing labor on or about vessels are bound to the same rule of care in regard to furnishing their servants with erately. Girard Coal Co. v. Wiggins, 52 Ill. App. 69.

Where a statute does not define the degree of care required of a master, such care must be determined by the principles of the common law. Cecil v. American Sheet Steel Co., 129 Fed. 542, 64 C. C. A. 72.

I. 554, 48 Atl. 798; Rogers v. Granger, 21 R. I. 83, 41 Atl. 1010. Compare Consolidated Coal Co. v. Bokamp, 181 Ill. 9, 54 N. E. 567 [affirming 75 Ill. App. 605], in which the servant injured was not a miner, and had nothing to do with propping the roof, and the company was held liable.

Assumption of duty by master renders him liable for negligent performance. Consolidated Coal Co. v. Scheiber, 167 Ill. 539, 47 N. E. 1052.

It is the duty of the owner to know when props are needed, and then to supply them, without waiting for request by the workmen. Bowerman v. Lackawanna Min. Co., 98 Mo. App. 308, 71 S. W. 1062, construing Rev. St. § 8922. See also Adams v. Kansas, etc., Coal Co., 85 Mo. App. 486.

Failure to furnish props of the exact length required is no ground for recovery, in the absence of evidence that the servant requested them to be of a particular length. Sugar Creek Min. Co. v. Peterson, 177 Ill. 324, 52 N. E. 475 [reversing 75 Ill. App. 631].

That there may have been props somewhere in the mine is not a substantial compliance with the statute that they are to be at the "usual place," particularly when the miner knows nothing about them. Donk Bros. Coal, etc., Co. v. Stroff, 100 Ill. App. 576.

Co., 1 Alaska 407, where it was held that, although appliances for unloading cargo may be suitable and sufficient at one stage of the tide, nevertheless if used when the tide is so low as to render their use in raising heavy loads dangerous, it becomes actionable negligence.

California.—Silveira v. Iverson, 125 Cal. 266, 57 Pac. 996, in which the injury was caused by reason of an insufficient reefing pennant. Compare Kennedy v. Chase, 119 Cal. 637, 52 Pac. 33, 63 Am. St. Rep. 153, in which a stevedore was injured by falling into an unguarded hatchway in a part of the ship over which he was not allowed to pass, and the owners were held not to be liable.

Kentucky.—Louisville, etc., Packet Co. v. Samuels, 59 S. W. 3, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 979, in which an insufficient gang-plank was furnished.

Holt, 15 Fed. 880 (unsafe hatchway).

England.—Carter v. Clarke, 78 L. T. Rep. N. S. 76, in which the injury was caused by the explosion of accumulated gas in the hold of the vessel, which was not properly ventilated.

Canada.—Abbott v. Anderson, 15 Quebec Super. Ct. 281, in which the servant was injured by the giving away of the choek holding the hawser used in towing. Compare Wyman v. The Duart Castle, 6 Can. Exch. 387, in which case it was held that the mere fact that a stop valve is broken in some way while a vessel is in port, causing injury to a servant, is not in itself sufficient to create a liability on the part of the owners.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 211.

Where a master has furnished a competent man, and he is conducting business in the fair exercise of capable judgment, and the question is one of opinion as to whether it was prudent to go on a steamboat wheel without a footboard, the master is not responsible for an error of judgment in that regard. 67, 5 McCrary 300, where it was held that push cars need not be supplied with brakes.

The use of cars of unequal height and mismatched couplings is not such negligence on the part of a railroad company as will render it liable for an injury to a brakeman resulting therefrom. Norfolk, etc., R. Co. v. Brown, 91 Va. 668, 22 S. E. 496. See also St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Higgins, 44 Ark. 293.

That draw-heads or draw-bars are of different heights does not constitute negligence. Holmes v. Southern Pac. Co., 120 Cal. 357, 52 Pac. 652; Ellsbury v. New York, etc., R. Co., 172 Mass. 130, 51 N. E. 415, 70 Am. St. Rep. 248; Dolan v. Burden Iron Co., 62 N. Y. App. Div. 545, 71 N. Y. Suppl. 145; Edall v. New England R. Co., 18 N. Y. App. Div. 216, 45 N. Y. Suppl. 959.

The fact that bumpers are not on a level does not show negligence. Frounfelker v. Delaware, etc., R. Co., 74 N. Y. App. Div. 224, 77 N. Y. Suppl. 470. But see Toronto R. Co. v. Bond, 24 Can. Sup. Ct. 715 [affirming 22 Ont. App. 78].

Double buffers.—The mere use by a railway company of cars with double buffers to protect the draw-heads is not negligence, although it renders the coupling of cars more dangerous. Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Harris, 53 Ill. App. 592. To the same effect see Indianapolis, etc., R. Co. v. Flanigan, 77 Ill. 365.

Failure to place deadwoods on cars not negligence see Hannigan v. Lehigh, etc., R. Co., 157 N. Y. 244, 51 N. E. 992 [reversing 91 Hun 300, 36 N. Y. Suppl. 293].

Difference from regular construction.—The fact that the construction of a car used as a caboose is different from that of a regular caboose does not show the unsuitableness of such car for the purpose. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, (Tex. Civ. App. 1893) 23 S. W. 1019.

The fact that a car was out of repair, with the knowledge of the company, does not establish negligence, if it was not in general use. Brown v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 59 Kan. 70, 52 Pac. 65.

Where a company provides sticks for coupling cars, and directs its servants to use them, it is not guilty of negligence in furnishing cars so constructed that they cannot be coupled by hand. Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitcomb, 111 Ind. 212, 12 N. E. 380.

19. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co. v. Winkler, 4 Pennw. (Del.) 387, 56 Atl. 112; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Voelker, 129 Fed. 522, 65 C. C. A. 226, 70 L. R. A. 264 [reversing 116 Fed. 867]. See also Neal v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 71 Ark. 445, 78 S. W. 220.

The United States act of March 2, 1893, requiring cars used in interstate commerce to be equipped with automatic couplers, requires such cars to be equipped with couplers which care to see that its cars are properly loaded, so as not to cause injury to its servants.²⁰

(IV) *TRACKS AND ROAD-BEDS*²¹ — (A) In General. A railway company, as to its servants, is not bound to furnish a safe road-bed and track. Its duty in that respect is to use all reasonable care and precaution in putting and keeping the road-bed and track in reasonably safe and good condition, and what constitutes reasonable care must depend upon the surroundings, and the dangers to be fairly apprehended and encountered.²² But the rule has no application where the place will couple automatically with cars equipped with automatic couplers of other makes. Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co., 196 U. S. 1, 25 S. Ct. 158, 49 L. ed 363 [reversing 117 Fed. 462, 54 C. C. A. 508].

incomplete and dangerous;²³ and generally it is sufficient if the tracks and road-bed were substantial and durable at the time of their construction, by competent engineers, and were properly supervised thereafter.²⁴ If a servant knows of the danger, or it is obvious, he is bound to exercise ordinary care to avoid it.²⁵

(B) Side-Tracks. Railroad companies are not held to the same degree of care in maintaining their side-tracks as their main tracks, and are not liable for injuries caused by defects in their construction, unless it appears that they are guilty of gross carelessness in handling their cars.²⁶

(C) Switches. It is the duty of a railway company to furnish and to keep in order and rightly placed switches which are free from defects and reasonably safe and suitable for the purpose in view.²⁷ Where this is done, the company's duty

A light so attached to a switch that an engineer can see whether it is open in time to stop the train if necessary is a reasonable provision against danger, and a jury may well find that a failure to provide such a light is negligence. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hause, 71 Ill. App. 147. Compare Grant v. Union Pac. R. Co., 45 Fed. 673, where it was held that the want of a light is not negligence, unless it is usual and customary to have them. E. 175, where it was held that freedom from negligence cannot be established by showing a construction of a switch device to be similar to like devices on first-class railroads, without showing that if it was dangerous to employees to work about it, they had notice of the danger.

Construction on grade not negligence see Hoosier Stone Co. v. McCain, 133 Ind. 231, 31 N. E. 956. Compare International, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 160, 55 S. W. 772, where it was held that where a switch is located on a grade and curve, so that the danger to employees in operating the road is increased, the company must exercise a commensurate degree of care for the safety of its track at that point.

Suppl. 258] (road in course of construction); Salters v. Delaware, etc., Canal Co., 3 Hun (N. Y.) 338.

Location of signal target.—The fact that defendant had placed its switch signal target on the same side of the main track on which its side-track was placed instead of on the opposite side did not constitute negligence, where the evidence showed that there was no uniform rule as to which side of the track it should be placed. *Grattis v. See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," §§ 218, 219, 221.

Defective blocking.—Where, by the method used by defendant, the flanges of the car wheels would in a few days wear the blocking so that it would be two inches below the rail; and there were other systems of blocking in common use, which prevented the wheels from wearing down the blocking, it was held that the system used was not a compliance with 3 Howell Annot. St. Mich. § 3397a, requiring railroad companies to block their switches. Eastman v. Lake Shore, etc., R. Co., 101 Mich. 597, 60 N. W. 309.

Where two companies receive cars from each other over a delivery track at a certain point, a person employed by one of them to take the number of its cars, and inspect their seals, as trains are made up at such place by the other, is an employee of the latter, within the meaning of the Ohio act of March 23, 1888. Atkyn v. Wabash R. Co., 41 Fed. 193.

negligence in leaving its frogs, switches, or guard-rails unblocked,³⁰ unless blocking is generally used in the same section of the country,³¹ or unless the company undertakes to maintain blocking, and allows it to become defective.³² As the object of blocking is only to prevent the feet from catching, a servant cannot recover for injuries received by reason of his arm's catching in an unblocked guard-rail.³³ Injuries to an arm caused by an unblocked guard-rail furnish no ground of recovery, because blocking is intended to prevent feet from being caught and held, and not hands and arms.³⁴

(E) Fences and Cattle-Guards—(1) AT COMMON LAW. As between a railway company and its employees, there is no common-law duty upon the company to fence its tracks and provide cattle-guards;³⁵ but where a company erects a cattle-guard at a point which its employees are constantly compelled to cross, the guard must be made reasonably safe for that purpose, it not being enough that it be made sufficient and safe to turn stock.³⁶

(2) UNDER STATUTE. There are two lines of decisions under statutes requiring railroad companies to fence their tracks and erect cattle-guards. Under the terms of some it is held that, the statutes being primarily for the protection of stock, a company is not liable to its servants for injuries received by reason of a failure to comply with the statutory requirements;³⁷ while under the terms of others it is held that the intent is to afford protection to persons upon the company's trains as well as to animals.³⁸

Burton*, 97 Ala. 240, 12 So. 88, in which, however, it was held that leaving a car temporarily on a side-track, in dangerous proximity to the main track, is not a defect in the "ways" within Code, § 2590, subs. 1 [overruling on this point *Highland Ave., etc., R. See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 227.

Warning of danger.—Where it is necessary to place posts for the support of a coal chute so near to a side-track as to render it dangerous for a person to ride on the side of a car in passing, it is not negligence in the railroad company toward its servants so to maintain them, if the servants are properly warned of the danger. Mobile, etc., R. Co. v. Vallowe, 214 Ill. 124, 73 N. E. 416.

Obstructions on adjacent land.—A street railroad company is not chargeable with negligence in permitting telephone poles to be erected on land not owned or controlled by the company so near the track as to be dangerous to employees operating its cars. Chattanooga Electric R. Co. v. More, 113 Tenn. 531, 82 S. W. 478.

Mail cranes.—Negligence cannot be predicated on the fact that a mail crane, when in position, was, at its nearest point, only thirteen and a half inches from the side of the locomotive—this being the usual distance, and the master car-builder, who was familiar with the government regulations, and under whose supervision the catches on the mail-cars were constructed, testifying that they could not be operated efficiently if placed at a greater distance. Kenney v. Meddaugh, 118 Fed. 209, 55 C. C. A. 115.

United States.—See Myers v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 95 Fed. 406, 37 C. C. A. 137, in which negligence was not shown, the bridge having been built at the height required by the municipal authorities for public convenience, and the brakeman having been warned, both verbally and by whiplashes placed at proper distances each side of the bridge.

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," § 225.

But see Lake Shore, etc., R. Co. v. Shook, 16 Ohio Cir. Ct. 665, 9 Ohio Cir. Dec. 9, where it was held that a company is not bound to ascertain whether the cars in its trains will permit a safe passage for a brakeman under a bridge.

A bridge below line of absolute safety may be justified by circumstances; but in no case can a company build a bridge so low that a brakeman cannot pass under it in a stooping position. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Hall, 87 Ala. 708, 6 So. 277, 13 Am. St. Rep. 84, 4 L. R. A. 710, 91 Ala. 112, 8 So. 371, 24 Am. St. Rep. 863. See also Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Cooley, 49 S. W. 339, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1372, in which the brakeman was struck while sitting on top of a car.

(2) WHIPPING STRAPS, TELLTALES, OR BRIDGE GUARDS. In the absence of a statutory requirement on the subject,⁴⁵ the failure of a railway company to maintain whipping straps, telltales, or bridge guards to warn brakemen who are on top of a train that it is about to pass under a bridge so low as to imperil their lives is not legal negligence, unless such devices are so manifestly serviceable as to command the consensus of intelligent railroad men, and such men do not honestly differ in judgment as to their utility.⁴⁶

5. COVERING OR GUARDING DANGEROUS MACHINERY OR PLACES⁴⁷ — a. In General. Under the general rule that the master must exercise reasonable care to provide his servants with a reasonably safe place to work, and with reasonably safe machinery and appliances, it is his duty to cover or otherwise guard dangerous machinery or places, where the nature of the work and the circumstances are such as reasonably to require such precaution.⁴⁸

b. Machinery — (1) IN GENERAL. Independently of statutory requirement, it is not negligence per se for a master to leave his machinery uncovered or otherwise unguarded;⁴⁹ but the question depends on the circumstances of each Railroad not liable if bridge safe when servant careful see Schlaff v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 100 Ala. 377, 14 So. 105.

Negligence to allow telltale to get out of order see Hines v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 78 Hun (N. Y.) 239, 28 N. Y. Suppl. 829 [affirmed in 149 N. Y. 569, 43 N. E. 987].

Injury from bridge guard.—A railway company is liable to its servant caused by his being struck by a bridge guard which is out of position, by reason of the wearing out of a rope attached to the guard, which it had provided no suitable means for keeping in a safe condition. Warden v. Old Colony R. Co., 137 Mass. 204. See also Darling v. New York, etc., R. Co., 17 R. I. 708, 24 Atl. 462, 16 L. R. A. 643, in which the telltale was safe for cars of ordinary height, but dangerous for brakemen on cars of a greater height.

Tunnel telltales.—It is no defense to an action for the wrongful death of a brakeman, who was put to work where he would have to pass through a tunnel, on the top of box-cars, and without warning him that he could not safely sit on such cars, that the company maintained telltales on either end of the tunnel, where such telltales did not hang low enough to reach a person sitting on a box-car. *Wainright v. Compare Sorenson v. Menasha Paper, etc., Co., 56 Wis. 338, 14 N. W. 446, in which it was held that negligence was not shown, plaintiff having fallen into an unguarded excavation of which he knew, and which he had occasion to pass.

Failure to fence roof not negligence see Kinnare v. Chicago, 70 Ill. App. 106. And see Quinn v. New York, etc., R. Co., 175 Mass. 150, 55 N. E. 891, construing Pub. St. c. 112, § 160.

Massachusetts statute construed.—The want of a guard on a run in a coal shed on which a servant had worked, from time to time, for fifteen years before his injury, is not a defect, within the meaning of Mass. St. (1887) c. 270, § 1. O'Maley v. South Boston Gas Light Co., 158 Mass. 135, 32 N. E. 1119, 47 L. R. A. 161.

6. INSPECTION AND REPAIR⁵⁴—a. Rule Stated. It is not only the duty of a master to use ordinary care to furnish his servants with a reasonably safe place to work, and with reasonably safe machinery and appliances, but he must also, by inspection from time to time, and by the use of ordinary care and diligence in making repairs, keep them in a reasonably safe condition.⁵⁵ Nevertheless the rule is well settled that the mere failure to inspect is not negligence, where an others.⁵⁶ So too a master is under no obligation to his servants to inspect during their use those common tools and appliances with which everyone is conversant;⁵⁷ nor is it the master's duty to repair defects arising in the daily use of an appliance, for which proper and suitable materials are supplied, and which may easily be remedied by the workmen, and are not of a permanent character, or requiring the help of skilled mechanics,⁵⁸ and while a master is bound to keep his machinery in reasonably safe condition, he need not keep it in the best possible order.⁵⁹ Nor again is a master required to exercise that exquisite and exhaustive care in the constant examination and overhauling of his machinery and work which would be incompatible with the proper furtherance of business.⁶⁰

The casual use of a telephone pole of another company does not, in the absence of custom, impose upon the company so using it the duty of inspecting it before directing an employee to climb it. Dixon v. Western Union Tel. Co., 71 Fed. 143.

Tool belonging to servant—Duty of master to fellow servant.—Where a hammer, the property of a servant, was purchased from a reputable firm, the master does not owe a fellow servant the duty of inspecting it. Dompier v. Lewis, 131 Mich. 144, 91 N. W. 152.

Where machinery is in good repair the master is not liable for failing to inspect as to the cleaning and oiling of it. Quigley v. Levring, 167 N. Y. 58, 60 N. E. 276, 54 L. R. A. 62 [affirming 50 N. Y. App. Div. 354, 63 N. Y. Suppl. 1059].

Appliance used for purpose not intended.—Where a master is not chargeable with negligence because an appliance fails to serve a purpose not intended, neither is he chargeable because he has omitted to inspect it, so as to discover that it was not suited for such unexpected use. Babcock Bros. Lumber Co. v. Johnson, 120 Ga. 1030, 48 S. E. 438; Quirouet v. Alabama, etc., R. Co., 111 Ga. 315, 36 S. E. 599; East Tennessee, etc., R. Co. v. Reynolds, 93 Ga. 570, 20 S. E. 70; *Hamilton v. Machine used by third person.—Where a planer in a factory was used indiscriminately by defendant's workmen and by contractors, and was liable to cause injury if not properly adjusted, no duty rested on defendant to inspect it, whenever it was used by defendant's workmen or by the contractors, to see that it was left in a proper condition. Wyman v. Clark, 180 Mass. 173, 62 N. E. 245.

The danger from "missed shots" being incident to the work of drilling a mine, it is not the duty of the master to make inspections for them after each explosion. Browne v. King, 100 Fed. 561, 40 C. C. A. 545. But see McMillan v. North Star Min. Co., 32 Wash. 579, 73 Pac. 685, 48 Am. St. Rep. 908.

Unsuccessful attempt to repair.—It is not enough when a machine is dangerously defective, and known to be so, to make a futile effort to put it in order, and then leave it to itself; and in such case the master is still liable, although he has no notice that the attempt to repair was ineffectual. Pioneer Cooperage Co. v. Romanowicz, 85 Ill. App. 407 [affirmed in 186 Ill. 9, 57 N. E. 864].

Boston Tow-Boat Co.*, 135 Mass. 209, 46 Am. Rep. 458.

Ordinary repairs.—The replacing of a rotten round in a forty-foot ladder is not "ordinary repairs," which a workman is expected to make, in the absence of proof that the defective condition was known to him. Twombly v. Consolidated Electric Light Co., 98 Me. 353, 57 Atl. 85, 64 L. R. A. 551.

b. Defects Not Discoverable by Inspection. In the absence of evidence that an inspection would have disclosed the defect which caused the injury, the mere failure to inspect will not warrant holding the master liable,⁶¹ and it is a question for the jury whether a proper inspection would have prevented the injury.⁶²

c. Manner and Extent of Inspection or Test—(1) IN GENERAL. Reasonable care in the matter of inspection requires a master to make such an examination and test as a reasonably prudent man would deem necessary, under the same circumstances, for the discovery of possible defects,⁶³ and he is not required, unless put upon notice as to the probable existence of defects, to employ unusual or extraordinary tests,⁶⁴ nor to adopt the latest and most improved methods of Inspection must be such as would probably reveal a defect if one exists. Union Stock-Yards Co. v. Goodwin, 57 Nebr. 138, 77 N. W. 357.

If only the very closest character of inspection can discover the defect reasonable diligence requires that inspection. Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Davis, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 279, 65 S. W. 217.

A mere ceremony of inspection, even though performed by competent inspectors, is not a performance of the master's duty. Columbus, etc., R. Co. v. Celley, 1 Ohio Cir. Ct. 267, 1 Ohio Cir. Dec. 146. See also Durkin v. Sharp, 88 N. Y. 225; Southern Kansas R. Co. v. Sage, (Tex. 1905) 84 S. W. 814 [reversing (Civ. App. 1904) 80 S. W. 1038]; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. McElyea, 71 Tex. 386, 9 S. Failure to discover discoverable defects negligence see Galveston, etc., R. Co. v. Buch, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 283, 65 S. W. 681.

The manner of inspection is immaterial, where the most careful inspection demanded by the law would not show the defect. Louisville, etc., R. Co. v. Campbell, 97 Ala. 147, 12 So. 574.

Where an inspection was solely for the purpose of cutting out defective cars, the railroad company owed no duty to a yard brakeman, part of whose duty was to board defective cars as they were sent from the main to the repair track and bring them to a stop, as to the manner in which such inspection should be made. Gerstner v. New York Cent., etc., R. Co., 178 N. Y. 627, 71 N. E. 1131 [affirming 81 N. Y. App. Div. 562, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 1063].

testing machinery or appliances.⁶⁵ The reasonableness and sufficiency of an inspection, when made, is a question of fact for the jury.⁶⁶

(ii) CUSTOMARY METHODS. While not conclusive upon the question of negligence,⁶⁷ the adoption by a master of the customary and approved means or tests for the discovery of defects in his machinery or appliances will as a rule discharge his duty to his servants in that regard, and an injury which happens to a servant notwithstanding must be accepted as resulting from one of the risks of the occupation.⁶⁸

d. Time and Opportunity For Inspection and Repair—(i) INSPECTION. While a master is entitled to a reasonable opportunity for inspection,⁶⁹ the duty is a continuing one,⁷⁰ and must be performed at reasonably frequent intervals,⁷¹ and whenever the circumstances are such as to suggest the propriety of an inspection;⁷²

Allen, 78 Ala. 494, where it was held that, the hydraulic test for boilers being extraordinary, and rarely used, except where engines are overhauled periodically, failure to apply such test when the engine was last overhauled, about ten months before the explosion, was not negligence, when the defect had existed only from four to six months.

70. Continuing duty.—Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 331, 29 Atl. 380, where it was held that the fact that machinery had been in daily use for a long time, and had proved safe and efficient, did not show that the master had exercised due care, since he was under a continuing duty of inspection. See also Deppe v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 38 Iowa 592.

How frequently an inspection should be made in the exercise of due care is a question of fact. E. E. Jackson Lumber Co. v. Cunningham, 141 Ala. 206, 37 So. 445.

Statute requiring daily inspection.—Under Ill. Laws (1883), p. 114, providing that the owner or operator of every coal-mine in which fire-damp is generated shall examine the shafts every morning with a safety lamp before any persons are allowed to enter, it was held that, although the miners may not have been at the moment engaged in mining, the duty of the owners still existed to make the required examination. and the fact that the master has purchased a completed and presumably tested structure from another does not relieve him of the obligation to take reasonable care to know or ascertain the safety of its design and construction, and he will be charged with knowledge of defects which a competent examination would have disclosed.⁷³

(ii) OPPORTUNITY TO REMEDY DEFECTS. Actual or constructive knowledge by a master of the defective condition of his places for work, machinery, or appliances does not make him liable for injuries resulting therefrom, unless he has had a reasonable opportunity, after acquiring such knowledge, to remedy the defect.⁷⁴

e. Inspection by Public Authorities. In some states statutes have been enacted providing for official inspection of places for work, machinery, and appliances in certain cases.⁷⁵ But such an inspection and test, pursuant to a

Where two hand-cars collide, and the patent injuries to one of them are serious, and such as to indicate great violence in the collision, it is the duty of the railroad company to make a reasonable examination and inspection to see if there are no latent injuries. *Solomon R. In determining what is a reasonable time for making the repairs and changes required, the jury should consider all the circumstances, such as the opportunity for making repairs, and the frequency with which the engine was used. Lytle v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 84 Mich. 289, 47 N. W. 571.

Immediate compliance with statutory requirement necessary see Bartlett Coal, etc., Co. v. Roach, 68 Ill. 174.

Whether the condition of apparatus was permanently dangerous, or only became so temporarily, but before the injured servant was put to work there, does not affect the liability of the master. Hess v. Rosenthal, 160 Ill. 621, 43 N. E. 743.

Sending out engine known to be defective.—A railroad company is not relieved from liability to a servant for negligence in sending him out with a defective engine simply because it did not have sufficient time to repair it after notice of the defect, and had no other engine in proper condition to send out. Greene v. Minneapolis, etc., R. Co., 31 Minn. 248, 17 N. W. 378, 47 Am. Rep. 785.

Liability of receivers.—In an action against the receivers of a railroad company for injuries resulting from the defective condition of the track, where it is not sought to charge the receivers personally, it is no defense that the defect existed when they took possession, and that they had not been in charge a sufficient time to enable them to remedy it. Bonner v. Mayfield, 82 Tex. 234, 18 S. W. 305.

75. Statutes construed see Spaulding v. Tucker, etc., Cordage Co., 13 Misc. (N. Y.)

statute, do not necessarily relieve the master, in the absence of notice or suspicion of any defect, from the duty, as regards a servant, of making further tests;⁷⁶ and the certificate of a factory inspector, approving a fire-escape, does not relieve the employer from liability for negligence in not providing a safe landing-place.⁷⁷

f. Operation and Effect. Where machinery or appliances have been carefully tested and found to be in good condition, the master is not liable for injuries resulting from defects which were not disclosed by such test.⁷⁸ But to excuse him from liability, it must appear not only that the inspector was competent, but also that the inspection was a reasonably careful one;⁷⁹ and a master, by having appliances inspected to determine whether they are safe and fit for a certain use, does not relieve himself from responsibility to a servant who acting under orders devotes them to a use totally different from that with respect to which such inspection was made.⁸⁰

7. KNOWLEDGE BY MASTER OF DEFECT OR DANGER⁸¹ — a. Rule Stated. The master's liability for injuries to a servant arising from defects in the place for work, or in the machinery or appliances, is dependent upon his knowledge, actual or constructive, of such defects. If he knew or should have known, by the exercise of reasonable care and diligence, of their existence, he is liable; negligent ignorance is equivalent to knowledge;⁸² but if he had no knowledge affect the rule that he is not liable for injuries to a servant caused by defects in machinery or appliances of which he has neither actual nor constructive knowledge.⁸⁴ If, however, the master has failed to comply with a positive requirement as to the construction of his appliances, the servant need not show knowledge on his part that he has not complied with the rule.⁸⁵

c. Structural Defects. Where the defect in an appliance is shown to be structural and is of such a character as renders it unsafe it may be inferred that the employer was aware of the defect and an employee who has been injured by such an appliance need not show that the master knew that it was defective.⁸⁶ But if a particular structure, machine, or appliance is without fault as to plan, mode of construction, and character of material, so that it was originally sufficient for all the purposes for which it was designed, and if the master has it afterward properly inspected by competent and skilful men, who exercise ordinary diligence to keep it in repair, the master has discharged his duty, and is not liable to a servant for an injury received by reason of a defect therein, unless it is shown that he had knowledge of such defect, and failed to remedy it.⁸⁷

d. Hidden or Improbable Dangers. While there is a presumption that a master, having knowledge of defects in the place for work, or in the machinery or appliances, has knowledge of the consequences which may result therefrom,⁸⁸

f. Constructive Notice—(i) IN GENERAL. To render a master liable for an injury to a servant, caused by a defect in the place of work, or in the machinery or appliances, it is not necessary that the master should have had actual knowledge of the defect; but it is sufficient to show that he could have discovered it by the exercise of reasonable, proper, and ordinary care and diligence in performing the duties of master.⁹³

(ii) TIME AND OPPORTUNITY FOR DISCOVERY OF DEFECTS. A master will be charged with constructive notice of a defect which has existed such a length

b. Improper or Unusual Use or Test. Where the place of work, machinery, or appliance was reasonably safe and suitable for the purpose for which it was intended, a servant cannot hold his master liable for personal injuries resulting from its inappropriate, unauthorized, unnecessary, careless, improper, or unusual use or test.⁵ But when an appliance is improperly used with the knowledge of the master, it makes no difference, so far as his liability for such improper use is concerned, whether or not it was originally built for such purpose;⁶ and where a master subjects an appliance to an unusual and un contemplated service or strain, by reason of which a servant is injured, he will be held liable.⁷

9. PROXIMATE CAUSE OF INJURY.⁸ In order to hold a master liable for injuries to a servant alleged to have been caused by defects in the place for work, or in the machinery or appliances, the defects complained of must be shown to have been the proximate cause of the injuries,⁹ and this, it has been held, is the case of states statutes and ordinances have been enacted regulating the speed of trains, requiring signals or watchmen at crossings, and like precautions against accidents. Under such statutes and ordinances there are two lines of decisions, due in a large measure to their difference in terms. On the one hand it is held that they are not for the benefit of employees of the railroads, and that they cannot recover for injuries received by reason of non-compliance with the statutory requirements;²⁰ while on the other it is held that the fact that the person injured is a servant of the company is no excuse for the violation of the statute or ordinance.²¹ A statute requiring signals upon the approach of a train to a public road crossing has no bearing upon an action for injuries to a brakeman by coming in contact with a highway bridge across the railroad track, and it is error to consider it.²²

(III) DEGREE OF CARE REQUIRED. Such reasonable care is required of the master in the methods of work adopted by him as is commensurate with the danger to be reasonably apprehended, and as reasonable and prudent men would exercise under similar circumstances.²³

(IV) *DELEGATION OF DUTY.*²⁴ There is some conflict of authority with regard to the effect of a master's delegating to a servant or agent his duty of providing reasonably safe methods of work. In some cases it is held that he cannot delegate this duty so as to relieve himself of responsibility for injuries caused by the negligence of his agent;²⁵ while in others it is held that where the master has employed a competent and experienced superintendent or foreman, and has furnished the proper and usual appliances for the performance of the

(v) CUSTOMARY METHODS. While the test of a master's liability is the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care for the safety of his servant, and not whether he has employed customary methods,²⁷ yet as a general rule a master will not be held responsible for injuries to a servant in the course of his employment where the usual and customary methods of work are employed,²⁸ provided such methods do not disregard the safety of the servant;²⁹ and where a servant, knowing the hazards of his employment as the business is conducted, is injured while engaged therein, he cannot recover merely on the ground that there was a safer mode in which the business might have been conducted, the adoption of dangers incident to the work are obvious,⁴⁸ or of common knowledge and fully understood by the servants,⁴⁹ or where the practice actually in force renders a rule unnecessary;⁵⁰ nor is the master bound to make rules as to how his servants shall conduct themselves outside the scope of their employment, nor as to how business shall be carried on or any act done which is not carried on or done with his knowledge and permission.⁵¹

(II) EFFECT OF CUSTOM OF OTHERS. While the adoption or non-adoption of rules by others in the same line of business is not conclusive as to the duty of the master in this respect,⁵² yet as a rule his adoption of such regulations as are in general use will relieve him from liability;⁵³ and where there is no evidence that any rules relating to the business had been adopted by others, or were necessary or practicable, he is not chargeable with negligence in failing to adopt any.⁵⁴ On the other hand, if persons of ordinary prudence, engaged in the same line of business, have found it necessary to provide rules for its management, the failure of a master to prescribe such rules is evidence of negligence.⁵⁵

b. Duty to Enforce Obedience.⁵⁶ It is the duty of the master to use reasonable care to see that the rules adopted by him for the safety of his servants are complied with, and if he fails to do so he will be responsible for injuries resulting from non-compliance therewith.⁵⁷

c. Reasonableness and Sufficiency.⁵⁸ The presumption is that rules which the master has adopted for the government of his servants, to prevent injuries to them, are reasonable and sufficient.⁵⁹ But to require obedience a rule must be a reasonable construction,⁷⁷ there is a presumption that they have been carefully considered and accurately expressed, and they ought to be construed more strongly against the master, who has made and adopted them, than against the servant, who has merely assented to, and agreed to be bound by, them.⁷⁸

g. Proximate Cause of Injury. In order that a servant may recover for injuries alleged to have been caused by the failure of the master to adopt or, having adopted, to enforce reasonable rules for the government of his servants, such failure must be shown to have been the proximate cause of the injuries.⁷⁹

3. ORDERS⁸⁰—a. Authority to Give. A master is bound by orders given to a servant by an authorized agent, and will be liable to the servant for injuries received while acting in obedience thereto, even though under the master's rules the agent had no right to give such orders;⁸¹ and where two agents are over one servant, he may obey the superior of the two.⁸² But a master will not be bound by orders given by an unauthorized person,⁸³ even though the servant believed that it was his duty to obey such orders;⁸⁴ unless the master has clothed the person giving the order with such apparent authority as to justify the servant in believing that he was in fact authorized.⁸⁵

b. Negligence in Giving Orders — (i) IN GENERAL. Since it is the duty of a servant to obey an order given by one in authority over him, if not manifestly unreasonable, the master must use reasonable care to protect his servants from danger in the execution of orders, and will be held liable for his own or his vice-principal's negligence in this regard.⁸⁶ In the absence of negligence, the master cannot be held liable.⁸⁷

for personal injuries, that the course pursued by him in giving the order complained of was that followed by other well-regulated companies in the same line of business,⁸⁸ or that the work which the servant was ordered to do was customarily done by servants of this class, and that he was willing to do the work for the extra pay.⁸⁹

c. Knowledge of Defect or Danger. A master is not liable for injuries to a servant, received by the latter while obeying an authorized command, unless the person giving the command knew, or, by the exercise of reasonable care, could have known, of the defect or danger which resulted in the injuries.⁹⁰

d. Duty Toward Inexperienced or Youthful Servants.⁹¹ Where a master knows that a servant is inexperienced or not of an age to appreciate the danger incident to an act which he is ordered to do, the master will be held liable to the servant for injuries received by him while executing an order which the master knows, or ought to know, involves danger.⁹² But it is not negligence for a master to set his servant to a piece of work, where such servant is of sufficient age and intelligence to appreciate the risk, which is both patent and incident to the particular work;⁹³ nor will the mere fact that a servant was under age show negligence on the part of the master, where the servant had worked for some time in the capacity in which he was working when injured, and understood the duties and responsibilities of the position.⁹⁴

e. Proximate Cause of Injury. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from obedience to a negligent order, there can be no recovery unless it is shown that the act of the servant in obeying such order was the proximate cause of the injury.⁹⁵ its details cannot be anticipated,⁹⁸ nor generally of any dangers that cannot be reasonably apprehended.⁹⁹ So too a master need not warn a servant of a risk naturally incident to the employment,¹ unless he knows that the servant is ignorant thereof.²

b. Delegation of Duty.³ The duty of warning and instructing a servant is a primary duty of the master, and the delegation of such duty to another servant, whether higher or lower in the scale of employment than the one exposed to danger, cannot relieve him of the responsibility imposed on him by the law.⁴

But where a servant has notice of the general risks and dangers of his employment, such as that many of the cars which he is required to handle as a switchman are defective, the master is not guilty of negligence in failing to notify him of each particular defect, as such duty, if required, is one necessarily devolving on fellow servants, for whose particular acts of negligence the master is not responsible;⁵ and a master who properly selects and instructs a man to give notice to the other servants of the movements of the apparatus being used by them is not responsible for his failure to give warning.⁶

c. Knowledge of Master of Defect or Danger.⁷ The master's liability in respect to warning and instructing his servant depends upon his knowledge, actual or constructive, of the defect or danger to which his servant was exposed, and negligence cannot be imputed to him unless he knew, or ought, in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care and diligence, to have known, that a warning was necessary.⁸

d. Customary Methods and Warnings. A servant has the right to rely on the warnings and signals customarily given in the conduct of the business, and if the master fails to give these, he is negligent.⁹ But negligence cannot be predicated upon the master's failure to give a warning in a particular instance, where, to the servant's knowledge, it has never been the custom to give such warning.¹⁰

e. Agreement of Master to Give Warning. Where there is a special agreement by the master to warn the servant, the non-performance of which is the occasion of injury to the latter, the master will be held liable.¹¹

f. Effect of Statutes Limiting Fellow Servant Doctrine. Under statutes limiting the fellow servant doctrine, the master is liable for injuries to a servant resulting from the negligence of fellow servants in failing to warn him of danger.¹²

g. Sufficiency of Warnings and Instructions.¹³ To be sufficient, a warning or instruction must be so plain and explicit that the servant will understand and appreciate the danger and know how to avoid it by the exercise of due care,¹⁴ and where extraordinary risks may be encountered, the servant should be warned of their character and extent, so far as possible.¹⁵ But it is not necessary that the servant should be warned of every possible manner in which injury may occur to him, or of risks that are as obvious to him as to the master, or which are readily discoverable by him by the use of ordinary care, with such knowledge, experience, and judgment as he actually possesses, or as the master is justified in believing him to possess.¹⁶

h. Proximate Cause of Injury. In an action for personal injuries alleged to have resulted from the failure of the master properly to warn and instruct the servant, a recovery can only be had where the master's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.¹⁷

Rule as to approach of trains to stations.—Where a rule of a railroad company requires all trains to approach stations with great care, expecting to find some other train occupying the main track, an engineer who is approaching a station is not entitled to notice of a train in front of him, although that train is four hours late, and he has been ordered to make his run in a certain time. *Illinois Cent. dangers caused by a change in his machinery, appliances, or place or methods of work, and he will be held liable for injuries resulting from his neglect of duty in this respect.²⁰

b. Dangers From Negligence of Fellow Servants. The master has a right to assume that his servants, being competent, will not be negligent, and it is not his duty, on employing a servant, to warn him against possible or probable dangers in case they are negligent.²¹ But a master who knows that a need of warning an inexperienced servant, working on a dangerous machine, has arisen, is bound to give it, although the danger arose from the negligence of a fellow servant.²²

c. Dangers Known to Servant. Although a master is negligent in not giving his servant instructions as to the dangers of his employment, if the servant receives such information from other sources, whether from other persons or from his own observation, and is thereafter injured, the master is not liable, since his negligence is not the proximate cause of the injury.²³ Where, however, the

e. Dangers From Extraneous Causes. If the master has knowledge that the particular employment is, from extraneous causes, hazardous or dangerous to a degree beyond what it fairly imports or is understood by the servant to be, he is bound to inform him of the fact, and if he fails to do so he is liable for such damages as the servant may sustain by reason of such causes.²⁷

f. Dangers From Work Outside Scope of Employment. Where a servant is ordered to do work outside of the scope of his employment, the master is under the same obligation to warn and instruct him as though he were engaged in his regular employment.²⁸ But where the servant is injured while working outside of the scope of his employment, voluntarily and without orders, the master is not chargeable with negligence for failing to warn him of danger.²⁹

See 34 Cent. Dig. tit. "Master and Servant," §§ 538, 550.

The ordinary risks of a particular business are those which are a part of the natural and ordinary method of conducting the business, even though they might fairly be called extraordinary with reference to a different business, or a different department of the same business. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Wild, 109 Ill. App. 38.

"Usual" is that which is common, frequent, customary. "Ordinary" is that which is often recurring. Chicago City R. Co. v. Leach, 104 Ill. App. 30.

Necessity of relation of master and servant see Russell v. Hudson River R. Co., 5 Duer (N. Y.) 39 (holding that a servant hired by the day, and whose day's work is over, does not assume the risk of injury while being transported on the master's train to and from exist,⁴⁷ unless there is some agreement to the contrary.⁴⁸ He does not, however, assume such risks as are created by the master's negligence,⁴⁹ nor such as are latent,⁵⁰ or are only discovered at the time of the injury.⁵¹ The doctrine of assumption of risk is distinct from that of contributory negligence,⁵² and rests upon an agreement of the servant with his master, express or implied, from the circumstances of his employment, that his master shall not be liable for any injury incident to the service, resulting from a known or obvious danger arising in the performance of the service.⁵³

b. Risks Arising After Commencement of Service.⁵⁴ The doctrine of the assumption of obvious risks by the servant applies as well to those which arise or become known to the servant during the service as to those in contemplation at the original hiring.⁵⁵

c. Effect of Statutory Provisions — (I) STATUTES REGULATING DOCTRINE. In some states constitutional or statutory provisions have been adopted abolishing the defense of assumption of risk, so far at least as railroads are concerned;⁵⁶ while in others the doctrine has been embodied in employers' liability acts.⁵⁷ In the latter case the repeal of the act embodying the common-law doctrine leaves the doctrine as it existed at common law.⁵⁸ Hemmis*, 72 Tex. 558, 11 S. W. 129, 13 Am. St. Rep. 828, which hold that a fireman or policeman bears no such relation to the city by reason of his employment as to prevent his recovery for an injury caused by defects in the streets.

When recovery is sought from a third person, whose negligence caused the injury, the rule does not apply, although the exposure to such injury is one of the risks of the employment. Pennsylvania Co. v. Backes, 133 Ill. 255, 24 N. E. 563.

A convict leased out by the state cannot recover for injuries sustained by his voluntarily placing himself in a position of danger, but he does not assume the risks visible in and ordinarily incident to the service, which a free man would be charged with having assumed. Simonds v. Georgia Iron, etc., Co., 133 Fed. 776 [affirmed in 133 Fed. 1019].

to whether a master may avail himself of the defense of assumption of risk where the injury complained of resulted from his neglect of a duty imposed by statute. Where the defense is forbidden by the statute itself, he cannot of course rely upon it;⁶⁰ and where there is no such inhibition, the weight of authority seems to be to the same effect,⁶¹ although there are decisions which maintain a contrary doctrine.⁶² If the object of the statute is other than the protection of the Act Cong. March 2, 1893, c. 196, provides that a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce, which fails to equip its cars with automatic couplers, as required therein, shall not avail itself, against an employee injured by such failure, of the doctrine of assumption of risk. *Kansas City, etc., R. Under Vt. St. §§ 3886, 3887, prohibiting any railroad company from running cars of its own with ladders on the sides, and providing that a company not complying with such requirement shall be liable for damages and injuries to employees resulting from such neglect, the defense of assumption of risk is inadmissible, and the doctrine cannot be upheld on the theory of contract, as to do so would be against public policy. *Kilpatrick v. servant, the master's neglect of the duty imposed will not prevent his relying on the servant's assumption of risk.⁶³

(iii) NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANTS. Under statutes making the master liable to a servant injured through the negligence of a fellow servant, there is no assumption of the risk of such negligence by the servant.⁶⁴ But such a statute does not absolve a servant from other risks incident to his employment;⁶⁵ and it is held that where a mine-owner exercises due care in the selection of a mining boss, as required by law, the employees assume the risk of his negligence.⁶⁶

Means of ingress and egress.—Adequate means being supplied by master to provide escape in case of fire, servant assumes risk of situation occasioned by known nature of business requiring windows to be closed. Huda v. American Glucose Co., 13 Misc. (N. Y.) 657, 34 N. Y. Suppl. 931.

Contrivances constructed by workmen.—The rule charging the master with liability for defects in premises and appliances does not apply when the same are not furnished by the master or by his direction or which he is not charged by law to provide. McKean v. Colorado Fuel, etc., Co., 18 Colo. App. 285, 71 Pac. 425.

Failure to light premises.—The servant assumes transitory risks caused by darkness of a passageway with which he is acquainted. Donovan v. American Linen Co., 180 Mass. 127, 61 N. E. 808. So he assumes risks incident to knowledge that the premises are not lighted and his own want of care in not procuring sufficient light. Willdigg v. Knox, 80 N. Y. App. Div. 390, 80 N. Y. Suppl. 1018. Extinguishment of lights usually kept burning must be shown to be due to the fault of the master, otherwise servant assumes risk from accident occasioned thereby. Dorney v. O'Neill, 34 N. Y. App. Div. 497, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 235.

Risks from means employed.—Servant assumes risks from means employed in carrying out master's order to perform work. O'Sullivan v. Flynn, 67 N. Y. App. Div. 516, 73 N. Y. Suppl. 1108.

78. See IV; E, 10.

Primary liability of master.—The risk of injury to a servant from defective machinery is primarily on the master, and remains on him unless the servant voluntarily assumes it. Dempsey v. Sawyer, 95 Me. 295, 49 Atl. 1035.

d. Shipping. The ordinary risks incident to employment on or about a ship, the existence of which are, or should be known, to him, are assumed by a servant,⁸¹ but not such as result from the master's negligence.⁸²

3. DANGEROUS OPERATIONS AND METHODS OF WORK⁸³—a. In General. The fact that the work in which he is engaged or the methods of work in use are of a peculiarly hazardous character does not affect the rule as to the assumption of incidental or obvious risks by a servant;⁸⁴ notwithstanding the fact that the

that a laborer working in an excavation in the side of a bluff does not assume the risk of injury from the rolling down of stones thrown out in the process of blasting for such excavation, and allowed by the master to remain on the rock above.

service is a dangerous one, this adds nothing to the liability of the master for injuries resulting from the nature and ordinary incidents of the undertaking;⁸⁵ and where there are two or more ways in which a servant may perform his duties and he voluntarily chooses an unusual or more hazardous method, knowing it to be such, he does so at his own risk.⁸⁶ The voluntary choice of an unusual or more dangerous method of work by the servant is scarcely distinguished from contributory negligence, and is so regarded in many decisions.⁸⁷

b. Operation of Railroads—(1) IN GENERAL. Upon entering the service of a railroad company a servant assumes the usual and ordinary risks incident to his employment and the methods of work adopted, so far as such risks are known to him, or will be known by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care;⁸⁸ but he

A risk ordinarily incident to the employment of a railroad servant is a risk of injury that does not arise or grow out of an act of negligence on the part of the railroad or its servants. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Kelly, 98 Tex. 123, 80 S. W. 79.

90. Georgia.—Central R., etc., Co. v. Smith, 82 Ga. 236, 8 S. E. 311; Central R., etc., Co. v. Sims, 80 Ga. 749, 7 S. E. 176.

Illinois.—Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Neer, 31 Ill. App. 126 [reversed on other grounds in 138 Ill. 29, 27 N. E. 705] (engineer of special train assumes risk of collision with another train on main track at a station where it is not customary to give him notice of such train); Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Gordon, 17 Ill. App. 63; Wabash, etc., R. Co. v. Conkling, 15 Ill. App. 157.

Iowa.—Kroy v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 32 Iowa 357.

Maryland.—Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Wachter, 60 Md. 395, holding that an employee who knows that it is customary to run special trains without notice assumes the risk of injury therefrom.

Massachusetts.—Sullivan v. Fitchburg R. Co., 161 Mass. 125, 36 N. E. 751, to the effect that a trackman whose duty it is to watch for and protect himself against wild trains assumes the danger of a collision between a wild train and a hand-car which he is pushing. Compare Caron v. Boston, etc., R. Co., 164 Mass. 523, 42 N. E. 112, holding a custom of sending cars upon a side-track, cars;⁹¹ likewise also to those incident to unblocked frogs, switches, and guard-on which trains are making up, at a speed of twelve miles an hour, unreasonable.

Minnesota.—See Schulz v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 57 Minn. 271, 59 N. W. 192, where it was held that, although a section hand assumes the risk of trains running at a dangerous speed, he does not assume the risk of the engineer's neglect to give a signal, if this is required by the circumstances of the case.

Pennsylvania.—Kennedy v. Pennsylvania R. Co., (1889) 17 Atl. 7.

Rhode Island.—McGrath v. New York, etc., R. Co., 14 R. I. 357, 15 R. I. 95, 22 Atl. 927, risk of being run down by special assumed by track workman while riding from work on hand-car.

4. INCOMPETENCY OR NEGLIGENCE OF FELLOW SERVANTS. The assumption by a servant of risks resulting from the incompetency or negligence of a fellow servant will be found fully treated in a subsequent section of this article.⁹⁷

5. KNOWLEDGE BY SERVANT OF DEFECT OR DANGER⁹⁸ — a. Necessity and Effect of Knowledge. The doctrine of assumption of risk is wholly dependent upon the servant's knowledge, actual or constructive, of the dangers incident to his employment. Where he knows, or in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care should know, the risks to which he is exposed, he will as a rule be held to have assumed them;⁹⁹

help understanding it fully.⁵ If, however, the servant has a general knowledge of defects sufficient to charge him with knowledge of danger, he assumes the risk, although he may not know of the particular defects which cause the injury;⁶ and where he is injured by a known risk of the employment assumed by him, it is immaterial that he did not know the precise extent or character of the injury liable to be sustained.⁷ To constitute an assumption of risk, knowledge of the risk must come in time to be of use.⁸

c. Comparative Knowledge of Master and Servant.⁹ The general rule is well settled that where the master and servant are possessed of equal knowledge, or means of knowledge, of defects and dangers,¹⁰ or where they are equally ignorant thereof,¹¹ the servant assumes the risk; and the same is true a fortiori where the servant has better means of knowledge than the master.¹² But if the master knows, or is under an obligation to know, of dangers of which the servant is ignorant, and of which he is not under an equal obligation to know, there is no assumption of risk.¹³

d. Constructive Notice¹⁴—(1) IN GENERAL. To warrant a finding that a servant assumed the risks of his employment, he need not have had absolute knowledge of the risks, if they were such that an ordinarily prudent man under the circumstances could by reasonable diligence have discovered them.¹⁵

Structural defects.—The right of a servant to recover for injuries caused by the fall of a platform on which he was standing is not affected by the fact that he had equal means with his master of knowing that it had not been constructed in a reasonably safe manner. Pfisterer v. Peter, 117 Ky. 501, 78 S. W. 450, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1605.

Presumptions.—A servant who undertakes to use machinery provided for him by the master is presumed to know its character and the dangers incident to its operation (Strange v. McCormick, 5 Pa. L. J. Rep. 10); but there is no presumption that a brakeman has sufficient skill to determine, from an inspection of the brakes, their fitness for use (Central R. Co. v. Haslett, 74 Ga. 59), or that a baggage-master knows of defects in the schedule or time-table (Georgia R., etc., Co. v. Rhodes, 56 Ga. 645).

(II) OPPORTUNITY TO ACQUIRE KNOWLEDGE.¹⁶ A servant assumes not only such risks as, from the nature of the business as ordinarily conducted, he must have known, but also those which the exercise of his opportunities for inspection would have disclosed to him.¹⁷ On the other hand he is not charged with the assumption of risks which are not incidental to his employment, and of which he has had no opportunity to learn.¹⁸

(III) KNOWLEDGE BY FELLOW SERVANT. A servant is not charged with a fellow servant's knowledge of defects and dangers.¹⁹

e. Effect of Duty to Discover or Remedy Defect. Ordinarily a servant is charged with no duty of inspection to discover latent defects or danger;²⁰ but

The general reputation of an incompetent servant among his fellows for incompetency is not alone sufficient to charge a servant, injured by reason of such incompetency, with knowledge thereof. Texas, etc., R. Co. v. Johnson, 89 Tex. 519, 35 S. W. 1042.

Marked cars.—A brakeman, in handling a damaged car, is chargeable with the notice conveyed by the mark "out of order" on the car, whether he was able to read it or not. Watson v. Houston, etc., R. Co., 58 Tex. 434.

where it is a part of his duties to discover or remedy defects in the master's appliances or places for work, he will be held to have assumed the risk of injury therefrom,²¹ provided they are discoverable from inspection.²²

f. Risks Outside Scope of Employment. If a servant knows of a defect or danger through which he is injured, he assumes the risk, even where it is outside of the scope of his employment;²³ but he is not bound to exercise care in knowing the fact, unless it is in the line of his duty.²⁴ The material question is whether the servant had sufficient experience or knowledge to understand the hazards of the extra work required of him.²⁵

g. Continuing Work After Knowledge of Danger²⁶ — (i) WITHOUT COMPLAINT OR PROMISE OF REMEDY—(A) Right to Demand Alterations. Since a servant assumes the incidental risks of his employment and those which are apparent to ordinary observation, he cannot call upon his master to make alterations to secure greater safety, or hold him liable in case of injury.²⁷

(B) Necessity of Notice or Complaint—(1) IN GENERAL. The rule that a servant has the right to rely upon the performance by his master of the duties imposed on him by law for the protection of his servants²⁸ is qualified by the further rule that where a servant knows, or is charged with knowledge of danger, and continues in the master's employment voluntarily and without complaint, and without any promise that the defect will be remedied or the danger removed, he assumes the risk of any injuries which may result from such defect.²⁹ This complaint;³⁰ that he may continue in the employment a reasonable time for the remedy of defects and the removal of danger;³¹ that he does not assume the risks of known defects, resulting from his master's negligence, unless they are so glaring and the danger so obvious that a man of common prudence would refuse to run them;³² and that his failure to complain does not necessarily charge him with assumption of risk, where his services are hired for a limited time, and he has no right to terminate his contract at will.³³

(2) DEFECTS OR DANGERS KNOWN TO MASTER. Where a defect or danger is caused by the master's negligence, and is known, or ought to be known, by him, he cannot rely upon the servant's failure to make complaint after learning thereof.³⁴

(c) Form and Sufficiency of Notice or Complaint—(1) IN GENERAL. When complaining of defects or dangers, it is not necessary that the servant shall state in exact words that he apprehends danger to himself, nor need there be a formal notification that he will leave the service unless the defect is repaired or the danger removed. It is sufficient if from the circumstances and conversation it can be fairly inferred that the servant was complaining on his own account, and that he desired the removal of the danger;³⁵ but this at least is necessary.³⁶

(2) TO WHOM MADE. To be sufficient, a complaint must be made to the master or his vice-principal, or to someone charged with the duty of remedying defects, and not to a fellow servant.³⁷

(II) AFTER NOTICE OR COMPLAINT TO MASTER—(A) In General. The fact that a servant has complained of defects and dangers will not relieve him of the assumption of risk, if he continues to work without any assurance or promise by the master that the danger will be removed,³⁸ or a fortiori, where he is told that no change will be made.³⁹ It has been held, however, that where the fact that machinery is unfit for use is brought to the attention of the master, the servant is absolved from increased risk, if the danger is not such that none but a reckless person would continue to use the machinery.⁴⁰

(B) Promise to Remedy Defect or Remove Danger—(1) IN GENERAL. Where the master or someone acting in his place promises to remedy the defect complained of, the servant by continuing in his employment for a reasonable time after such promise does not assume the risk of injury from the defect unless the danger was so patent that no person of ordinary prudence would have continued to work.⁴¹ This rule does not apply in the case of ordinary labor with
